"McGill, in good conscience, resolved that, having persuaded his friends to put money in the bank, and feeling doubtful as to the safety of the money, it was his duty to put the men out of that position," said Thomas Stewart, counsel for the defendants. "They put their money there through confidence in him, not through confidence in the Farmers' Bank."

RUPTURE IS POSSIBLE; MAY BE RED SUNDAY

Vatican May Break Off Relations With Spain.

Papal Nuncio to the Spanish Court Is Preparing to Leave In Case Premier Canalejas Goes Any Further In His Anti-Catholic Policy—Bloodshed Is Feared at San Sebastian When Clericals Celebrate Sunday.

Rome, Aug. 5.—Monseignor Vico, the papal nuncio to the Spanish court, was given instructions from the Vatican to be ready to leave Madrid at a moment's notice, in case of an unfavorable issue to the negotiations.

This preparation for a complete rupture of diplomatic relations between Spain and the Vatican would indicate that little is hoped from the answer which Cardinal Merry del Val is now drafting. Although the Vatican is earnestly trying its best to avoid a complete break with Spain, Cardinal Merry del Val fears that Senor Canalejas, the Spanish Premier, will be forced, in order to satisfy his extremist supporters, to still further accentuate his anti-Catholic policy, and the cardinal is preparing for the worst.

The Giornale D'Italia publishes an interview with Cardinal Vicenzo Vannutelli, who describes Premier Canalejas as "a terrible man," adding that it is impossible that King Alfonso approves his anti-clerical policy.

Candinal Vannutelli goes on to point out that the King is a fervent Catholic by sentiment and tradition but that he is too young to grapple with the situation and he has been seriously embarrassed.

With reference to the report that the King of Portugal is to visit the King of Italy in 1911, thus disregarding the prohibition of the Vatican, Cardinal Vannutelli considers this most unlikely, as Portugal has just appointed a representative to the Holy See.

May Be a Red Sunday.

Madrid, Aug. 5.—A renewed and formal prohibition of the proposed manifestation of the clerical forces at San Sebastian, the summer capital, next Sunday, was issued yesterday by the Minister of the Interior. The organizers of the demonstration nevertheless persist in their plans and as the Republican leaders are arranging an anti-clerical demonstration at San Sebastian on the same day, great apprehension prevails.

The civil authorities are considering legal prosecutions against the organizers of the proposed Catholic manifestations and troops are in readiness to enter the summer capital at any time.

PUGSLEY AT MILITARY COLLEGE

Kingston, Aug. 5.—Hon. Dr. Pugsley was here yesterday and promised new dormitories, a drill hall and a cement wharf at the Royal Military College, which he saw yesterday for the first time. Dr. Pugsley was delighted with Kingston. He said it had a magnificent location. He went on to Toronto on the Government steamer Speedy.

Capt. Wolfe, Chatham, England, will succeed Capt. Brown, and Capt. Sedgewick, Hillfield, Eng., takes Maj. de Bury's place at the Military College in September.

Paul Waggoner and Joseph Clappon, Toronto salesmen, are held here pending enquiry into their Toronto movements. On a vagrancy charge, the men were remanded to jail for a week. News came that they had issued checks in Toronto when they had no funds in the bank.

At Charlotte St. Church

During the absence of Rev. G. W. Henderson, the pulpit of Charlotte-st. Methodist church will be occupied by Rev. Alexander Langford of Toronto.

CONDEMNS MONTREAL'S MORALITY

Montreal, Aug. 5.—That Montreal is one of the worst places on the American continent, that the social evil has increased here at an alarming rate during the past few months, and that Inspector O'Keefe and his special morality squad are grossly inefficient, is the statement made by J. H. Roberts, secretary of the Dominion Alliance.

Insuring King George.

London, Aug. 5.—The Canadian Associated Press learns that recently there has been a very large increase in the number of life policies on King George at Lloyds. The policies are taken for two years.

The West Wants Men.

Winnipeg, Aug. 5.—Local immigration offices and employment agents report serious shortage of labor in the West, especially in those districts where harvesting has started.

Prince Henry of the Netherlands, the Prince Consort of Queen Wilhelmina, fell from his bicycle and sustained a fracture of the collar bone.

Dr. Hawk of Melfort, Sasks., has been arrested, charged with illegal practice in the case of Mary Scott, who died in convulsions at the hospital.

At St. John, N.B., John Kearns, confined to bed with tuberculosis, took advantage of a moment when his wife, who was sitting up with him, had fallen to sleep, and cut his throat with a razor.

Eight persons, seven of whom were city firemen, were injured in a fire which destroyed one of the Smith-McCord-Townsend Dry Goods Co.'s warehouses at Kansas City, Mo., and caused $200,000 damage.

At Oakland, Cal., despondent because he believed he was about to be turned out of the house of friends with whom he lived for some time, Wm. Cooper, formerly of New York, shot and killed Mrs. Hurley Buss, dangerously wounded her husband and fatally wounded himself.

160,000 CAME TO CANADA

Ottawa, Aug. 5.—A hundred and sixty thousand immigrants came to Canada in the six months of the calendar year ended June 30. The final figures are not yet ready at the Department, but the above is the approximate total. Of this number the proportion is about 90,600 Americans and 70,000 British and continental.

Italy's Formal Demand.

Washington, D.C., Aug. 5.—What is assumed to be Italy's formal demand for the extradition of Porter Charlton, the young American in the Hudson County (N.J.) jail, charged with having killed his wife, Mary Scott Charlton, at Lake Como, Italy, reached the State Department yesterday.

TRIED TO BRIBE GORE; HOW "YANKEES" DO IT

Blind U. S. Senator Makes Charges Against Republicans.

Says Vice-President Sherman Is the Man Higher Up In a Flagrant Attempt to Secure Lands Belonging to Oklahoma Indian Tribes—Attorney Wanted a Fee of Three Millions For Putting Through Deal.

Munskogee, Okla, Aug. 5.—What happened in the private office of United States Senator Thomas P. Gore of Oklahoma, at Washington at noon last May 6th, formed the basis of sensational charges, involving the names of Vice-President Sherman, Senator Charles Curtis of Kansas, Congressman B. S. McGuire of Oklahoma and others, in a hearing before a special Congressional investigating committee here yesterday.

During the thirty or forty minutes of a conference held in that office, Senator Gore testified that he was approached by Jacob L. Hamon, former chairman of the Oklahoma territorial Republican committee and also former chairman of the Oklahoma State Republican committee, and that he was offered a bribe of $25,000 or $50,000 to remove certain legislation pending in Congress, so that $3,000,000 might be paid to J. F. McMurray, an attorney of McAllister, Okla., and his associates.

The money was to represent "attorney's fees of ten per cent. of $30,000,000, which was to be obtained from a

THOMAS P. GORE.

New York syndicate for 450,000 acres of coal and asphalt lands now owned by the Choctau and Chickasaw Indians in this state.

Vice-President Sherman was mentioned by Mr. Hamon, Senator Gore testified, as being interested in the land deal to the extent of favoring the approval by Congress of what was known as the McMurray contracts with the Indians.

"When I scoffed at the offer of a bribe, even if it was raised to $50,000, as Hamon suggested it might be," testified Senator Gore, "my visitor (Hamon) at my office in Washington went on to say other members of Congress were interested in the contracts. He said Senator Curtis was interested and Congressman McGuire of Oklahoma was interested, and then he mentioned the name of a man higher up in the Government. I was appalled when I learned that name."

"What was the name of that man higher up?" asked Chairman Burke.

"Well," replied the blind Senator, "I don't like to say. Indeed, I could not repeat it without a great deal of reluctance."

"Now, Senator Gore," explained Mr. Burke, "this committee has come here to get all the facts, and we want you to tell all you know."

"Well, as that is the case," responded Mr. Gore, "I will tell all I know. The man mentioned by Hamon as being higher up and interested in the McMurray contracts was Vice-President Sherman."

No further questions were asked concerning the mention of Vice-President Sherman.

What happened in another private room in Washington, where also, it is alleged Hamon made more overtures relative to the land deal, was told by Congressman C. E. Creager, of the third Oklahoma district. Congressman Creager supplemented the testimony of Senator Gore.

He said that on June 16 last, he was invited by Hamon to meet him in a private room at the Occidental Hotel in Washington. Having gone there, Mr. Creager testified, he was informed he could have a substantial "interest" in the land deal, if he could withdraw his opposition to the approval of the McMurray contracts by Congress.

TURTLE HATCHED IN HIS STOMACH

Pittsburg, Aug. 5.—William Douglass, of the north side, is dead as the result of a turtle's egg hatching in his stomach. A few weeks ago Douglass partook of some turtle soup. Four days after taking the soup he became ill and numerous physicians were unable to diagnose his disease. An autopsy was performed and a partially formed turtle, almost as large as a hen's egg, was found in his stomach.

THE PENMAN GAMES

The announcement of the Penman athletic games is found in another column. They are held under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. This later organization formerly starting as a purely religious body, in a very insignificent way, has grown world-wide. "A Sound mind in a Sound Body," is or should be one of its slogans. But regardless of slogans within its walls the Y.M.C.A. has within its membership any number of live members who know their business in the field, who can run an well as pray, who can hurdle as well as testify. These are the kind of men that will be here on Labor Day, September the 8th, and we will be glad to see them.

GUELPH

Guelph's rate is 17 mills. In Peterborough we pay 22 mills. But think of the privilege of living in Peterborough. Guelph's rate last year was 14 mills, but this season, and for the past few years they have been embarked on a number of permanent enterprises, which at first cost some money. But they'll get it back. Guelph is a city that believes if there are any good things, Guelph is to get it. It believes in municipal ownership. It owns its street railway. George Sleeman, a brewer, went broke in building and running it. Guelph gets about $6,000 profit yearly from its street railway. It owns a park and a toboggan slide. In the summer when the young man's fancy lightly turns to love, he takes his girl to the park. In the winter when Boreas is getting busy he takes her for a skate on the city rink or a scooot on the toboggan. Guelph has a band. So has Peterborough. Guelph holds its concert in the city park. The people travel on the street cars to get there. Guelph owns its waterworks, its electric light, its gas plant. It pays money to see they are efficiently conducted. It gets a good profit from each. Guelph is a shareholder in the Guelph Junction Railway. William Bell, James Goldie, Charles Raymond, George Sleeman and a few others put in a few thousand dollars to get the thing started. They got the money back with interest. Guelph gets thousands yearly from this branch of the C.P.R., which runs as far as Goderich. Now Peterborough is a fine city. IT BELIEVES IN MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP—THAT IS OF THE GARBAGE PILE.

THE BAR

The bar, now where can a man go to spend his evenings, to church? Yes, he might go on Wednesday night, but square and fair, what attraction is there for the sinner in the prayer meeting? None at all. Then where can the sinner, the respectable sinner, the gentleman sinner, the sinner in a strange land, spend an hour or two of a night. In the park? yes, in the park, but what will he do in the park, if he hasn't got a girl. The bar is the only place known in Peterborough where the poor man can be treated corteously—if he has the price. It isn't large 10c. will take him in and a friend also. Here they can talk and talk and talk. The 10c. gives them the attention of a waiter, a no less respectable attention than would be shown a millionaire. When they want to spit they can spit, when they want to "light up" they can light up. There is a feeling of friendship and at homeship in a bar room without producing the pedigree or family details. The cost is 10c. Some declare the bar is a nuisance and a terror. Perhaps it may be—but—it is the poor man's club and here the poor man meets nightly and here he will meet until a better and more convenient place is offered him in which he can forget his boarding house, his scolding wife, or the other evils of the age.

EVEN IN ST. CATHARINES

A garbage collection system is a sanitary necessity, and we cannot afford to take any retrogressive steps back to a voluntary system, which is really no system at all.—The Standard.

LOOSE AND BAGGY

Chicago, Aug. 3.—Well-tailored men of the coming fall will be narrow of shoulder and broad of shest, and the present type of wide shoulder but anemic "clothing store athlete" will have vanished from the realm of the sight.

Exhibits of the fashion show, which was opened formally to-day presaged the passing of the artifical wide shoulder, and bore evidence that superfluous cloth in future will be lavished on the chest.

The overcoat of the "man who knows" will be loose and baggy. The latest thing in keep-warm clothing is called a "greatcoat." Any size will fit anyone fairly well, but is guaranteed not to fit any individual perfectly. The coat coat will bear the ulster collar of last winter, only more so.

Thus we are made. We will be "narrow of shoulder and broad of chest" in the fall. That's womenly. In the winter we will be "loose and baggy." That's bummy. Men we have no laugh on the women. Can we not assert ourselves.

Why should we fall for these creations. We have joked about the women's big hats and their dresses that button up the back — but loose and baggy—"narrow of shoulder and broad of chest," let us be silent for evermore. "Loose and baggy"—we are thus made tramps.

LITTLE ITA

This paper is not a free advertising medium. It is a newspaper "adds" so much per line, but Ita seems worthy of a little comment free of charge. We are so much intent on that next dollar, or that business chance that we forget. We forget that there are occult forces at work. Of course not every one has occult powers. Ita seems to have.

A SANITARY CITY

The endeavor being made to improve the health conditions of the city is one that is strictly in season and to be highly commended. Guelph has experienced a wonderful transition in this regard within the past few years, and there are few cities in Canada its size which can boast of better sanitary conditions since the sewerage system now in use was planned.

It will not do to stop here, however. There is still much to do, and the extension of the system to those who do not use it, or cannot do so because of the mains not being laid, is as important as the ways and means are difficult to solve. The outdoor closets and refuse in the back yards are still Guelph's drawback, even if the dangers arising from this condition of affairs are not as serious as in years past.

The extension of the garbage collection scheme to every quarter of the city is highly advisable, and if this were done it is just possible that the better method would be to defray the cost thereof out of the general tax rate. By so doing there would be less evasion and a more thorough clean up of the whole city. —Guelph Herald.

There is a system of garbage collection now in Guelph. It is so satisfactory that the Herald wants to have it adopted in the outskirts. But then great bodies like the Peterborough Board of Health and Council move slowly. Witness the elephant for instance.

IN THE SQUARED CIRCLE —"NIT"

The latest phase of the Printing Bureau scandal is the quarrel between Mr. C. H. Parmelee, the recently appointed Liberal Kings' Printer, and Mr. Charles Murphy, the recently appointed Secretary of tSate. Mr. Murphy has elbowed Mr. Parmelee aside from the investigation of his own department, and has inflicted upon him humiliations such as seldom have been heaped upon a public official in a position of authority and responsibility.

Mr. Parmelee was a Liberal M.P. for 12 years, from 1896 to 1900. He represented Shefford, and was one of Mr. Sidney Fisher's band of retainers from the Eastern Townships. He did not run in 1908 and in 1909 was made King's Printer. He is a newspaper publisher of long experience. He became editor of the Waterloo Advertiser when 20 years of age, and with the exception of three years spent in a Montreal newspaper office he managed the Advertiser until 1908. In all he had some thirty years of experience. In particular he did a great deal of job printing, and his office had a remarkably good name for some branches of this. For example, lawyers in places as far distant as Ottawa made use of legal stationery printed by Mr. Parmelee in Waterloo, Quebec. He thus had technical qualifications for his post, and it was the subject of remark in 1909 and early in 1910 that since Mr. Parmelee had taken charge the Printing Bureau, had got the blue books out much more promptly than before, thereby making an old complaint against it.

Now, is a Minister discovers that something has gone wrong in his department his natural move is to summon the Deputy Minister of that Department to help him investigate. Yet this is precisely what Mr. Murphy did not do when he was made aware that grafting was going on in the Printing Bureau. He ignored Mr. Parmelee, and called in one of his other deputies, Mr. Mulvey. It is as if Mr. Oliver called in Mr. Pedley, the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, over the head of Mr. Cory to investigate the Interior; or as if Mr. Lemieux while Minister of Labor, had pushed Dr. Coulter to one side and had Mr. Mackenzie King, as Deputy Minister of Labor, look into the management of the Post Office. Mr. Murphy associated Mr. Mulvey with him throughout; left Mr. Parmelee out of everything; took Mr. Mulvey down to New York with him, and, it is understood, did not even notify Mr. Parmelee that such a move was in contemplation.

Moreover, Mr. Murphy has evinced the strongest hostility to Mr. Parmelee. In conversation he censures him on the ground that he has shown great slackness. It is understood that he waited upon the Premier with a request that Mr. Parmelee be dismissed. This Sir Wilfrid Laurier declined to accede to, and it seems that thereupon Mr. Murphy cabled to Mr. Fisher, then in Europe, that he had had better come home and look after his protege.

Lucky Judas

Harper's Weekly.

When the Passion Play at Ober-Ammergau was in progress ten years ago an American visitor spent much of his spare time looking up the actors in their homes and chatting with them about the play. One complaint he met almost everywhere was the tremendous fatigue the performers suffered at the close of the eight-hour performance. Coming to the home of Hans Zwink, the Judas of the play, he found the painter-actor in quite a cheerful mood.

"Does the performance fatigue you so much, too?" the tourist enquired.

Ere Herr Zwink could reply his little ten-year-old son chirped up:

"Pa, he don't get tired. He hangs himself at three o'clock and comes home two hours before the others.

Charles M. Hays

Mr. Charles Melville Hays was born in Rock Island, Ills., on May 16, 1856, and entered railway service in 1873, as a clerk in the passenger department of the Atlantic and Pacific Railway at St. Louis. Four years later he became secretary to the general manager of the Missouri Pacific, and seven years afterwards he took a similar position with the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific, and rose in two years to the position of assistant general manager of the road. In 1887 he was appointed general manager of the Wabash Western, and later of the Consolidated Wabash System. From January 1, 1896, to January 1, 1896, to January 1, 1901, he was general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway System. He left the Grand Trunk to become president of the Southern Pacific, but before the year ended he gave up the position and returned to the Grand Trunk as 2nd vice-president and general manager. Since then he has become president of the G.T.R., of the Grand Trunk Pacific, Central Vermont, Grand Haven and Milwaukee, St. Clair Tunnel Company, and other connections of the G.T.R.

Since he returned to the G.T.R. he has changed it from a fourth-rate, single-track line, to a first-class double-track railway.

Mr. Hays is a big, broad-shouldered man of rather reserved demeanor.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

Hillard felt of his collar and drew down his cuffs. "Probably some joke," he ventured tentatively.

"If it isn't the man who would stoop to such tommyrot and tack the name of his club to it must be an ass."

"No doubt about that. Odd that this is the first time I have heard about it." But silently Hillard was swearing at his folly.

"I may depend upon you tonight, then?" said Merrihew.

"I shall be pleased to meet Miss Killigrew," which was a white one. Hillard would have paid court to a laundress rather than offended Merrihew.

And promptly at 11 he went up to the card room and dragged Merrihew away. Merrihew gave up his chair reluctantly. He was winning. The amateur gambler never wants to stop.

On the way to the Killigrew apartment Merrihew's moods varied. At one moment he was on the heights, at the next in the depths. He simply could not live without Kitty. Perhaps if this trip abroad turned out badly she might change her mind. Seven thousand could be made to muster. Twice Hillard came very near making his friend a confidant of his own affair, but he realized that, while Merrihew was to be trusted in all things, it was not yet time.

He found a pleasing and diverting company. There was Mere Killigrew, a quaint little old lady who deplored her daughter's occupation, but admitted that without her success heaven only knew how they would have got along. There was the genial Thomas O'Mally, a low comedian of genuine ability, whom Hillard knew casually; Smith, a light comedian, and Worth, a moderately successful baritone, to whom Hillard took one of those instant and unaccountable dislikes. These three and Kitty were going abroad.

Kitty fancied Hillard from the start, and he on his side found her well educated, witty and unaffected. She was even prettier than her photograph. Merrihew's face beamed upon them both in a kind of benediction. He had known all along that once Jack saw Kitty he would become a good ally in fighting down her objections.

"Think of singing in Italy!" cried Kitty. "Isn't it just wonderful?"

"And has Merrihew told you to get a return ticket before you sail?" with half a jest.

"Don't you think it will be successful?" a shade of disappointment.

"There will be thousands of lonesome Americans over there. Out of patriotism, if for nothing else, they ought to come to see us."

"They certainly ought to. But I'm an old kill-joy."

"No, no; go on and tell me all your doubts. You have been over there so many times."

"Well, supposing your tourists are tired after having walked all day through the churches and galleries, they may want to go to bed early. But you never can tell till you try. You may become the rage on the continent. Yet you go into the enemy's country. It isn't the same as going to London, among tolerant cousins. In

She was prettier than her photograph.

Italy and in Germany there is always so much red tape—blundering, confusing red tape, custom duties, excessive charges. But your manager must know what he is doing."

"He has everything in black and white, I believe. But your advice is sensible."

"Do you know anything about Italy or Germany?"

"Only what I learned in my geographies," laughing—"Rome, Florence, Genoa, Venice, Nice, Milan, Strassburg, Cologne and on to Berlin. It is like a fairy story come true."

"Who is your prima donna?" he asked.

"Ah!" Kitty's face became eager with excitement. "Now you have put your finger on the mystery that is bothering us all. Not one of us has seen her or knows her name. She has not rehearsed with us and will not till we reach Naples, where we rest a week. When we speak of her the manager smiles and says nothing, and as none of us has seen the backer Mr. Worth thinks that she herself is the prima donna and backer in one. We think that she is some rich young woman who wishes to exploit her voice. There's a lot of them in the world. I wish I knew her. Little has been said about the venture in the papers, and I'm glad. We may prove a perfect fizzle, and the less said the better. As we can't walk back, I must learn to swim. Lunch is ready, every one!"

The mummers and the outsiders flocked into the small dining room. There was plenty to eat; beer, soda, whisky and two magnums of champagne, Merrihew's contribution to the feast. Hillard listened with increasing amusement to the shop talk. It was after 1 when they returned to the sitting room, where the piano stood. The wine was now opened, and toasts were drunk. O'Mally told inimitable stories. There was something exceedingly droll in that expressive Irish face of his.

Worth did not drink, but Hillard did not like his handsome face any the more for this virtue. He sang remarkably well, however, and with a willingness Hillard had not believed he possessed. He wondered vaguely why he disliked the man. Otherwise Hillard enjoyed himself vastly.

"Mr. Merrihew has been telling me all about you," said Kitty.

"You mean, of course, my good qualities," replied Hillard.

"To hear him talk one would think that you possessed nothing else. But I am sure that you have glaring faults such as a man might pass over and a woman go round."

"I believed that Merrihew had a serious fault till tonight," he said.

She looked at him quickly and colored.

"Has the foolish boy been telling you that I refused to marry him? I like him very much," she added gravely, "but I shall never marry any man till I have ceased to love the stage. I am not a whit less extravagant than he is. How could the two of us live on an income which he himself admits that he cannot live within? A month after I am gone he will forget all about me."

"Merrihew is the most loyal man I know," Hillard declared.

"Of course he is loyal! And he is always in earnest—for the moment."

And then they both laughed.

It was outrageously late, nearly 4, when the revelers took leave. Merrihew was happy with that evanescent happiness which goes hand in glove with late suppers and magnums.

"Isn't she a little wonder, Jack?"

"Yes, she is, Dan. It might be a good thing for you to marry a sensible little woman like that. But she won't have you."

"No, she won't." Merrihew reached for his watch. "Four a. m."

"Say, what do you think of that man Worth?"

"Very good voice, but he's too handsome."

"Oh, go on! You're as fine a looking chap as there is in New York. But this man Worth has the looks of a lady killer. He's been eying Kitty, but it doesn't go. Hang it, I can't see why she won't marry me now."

"You must have patience."

"Or more money. Can't O'Mally tell a good story, though?"

"Yes, but I should hate to turn him loose in my wine cellars. I imagine he will praise anything good to drink but water."

Merrihew roared.

"Well, here's your station, Dan. Shall I see you tomorrow?"

"Eight-thirty in the park. Nothing like a horse for a headache."

Hillard arrived home tired and sleepy, but as he saw a letter on the stand in the hall his drowsiness passed quickly. There was no other blue envelope like it. She now had his house address; she was interested enough to look it up. She did not follow his lead and write in Italian; she wrote in English—crisp English too. Again there was neither beginning nor ending. But this was a letter. There was something here of the woman, something to read and read again:

I had told the maid to burn your letter, but she left it on the floor where I had thrown it, and I came across it this morning. It looked rather pathetic. So I am writing you against my better judgment. Yes, I know your name. I find that I am well acquainted with people you know. I am a woman who often surrenders to the impulse of the moment. I may or may not answer any future letter from you. You write very good Italian, but it will surprise you to learn that I detest all things that are Italian. Once I loved them well. Why should you wish to know me? Our ways are as divergent as the two poles. Happy because I sing? There are some things over which we can sing or laugh, but of which we cannot speak without crying. Happy or unhappy, what can this matter to you? To you I shall always remain the lady in the fog. Are you rich, young, talented? I care not in the least. Perhaps it amuses me to add to your confusion. Find me? I think not. Misguided energy!

Hillard put the letter away, extinguished the lights and passed up to his room. This was a direct challenge. He would accept it. This time he would use no personal to tell her that a letter awaited her. She should make the inquiries herself. And from the mail clerk he would obtain a description of the elusive Mme. Angot. Next morning he rode in the park with Merrihew. Again he saw the veiled lady on the Sandford black. Out of normal curiosity he telephoned the stables and made inquiries. The reply was short. No one at the stables knew the lady, but she rode the horse on proper authority.

That night he wrote:

I shall keep on writing till you cease to reply. Let me be frank with you. I am bored. So are you. The pleasure you derive in keeping up this mystery engages you. You bid me to find you. I accept the challenge. You must understand at once that it is the mystery that interests me. It is the unknown that attracts me. I am mentally painting you in all sorts of radiant colors. You defy me to find you. There is nothing so reliable as the unexpected, nothing so desperately uncertain as a thing assured. I warn you that I shall lay all manner of traps, waylay your messengers, bribe them. I shall find out where you live. The rest will be simple.

She replied:

I have no desire to alleviate your confessed boredom. Your persistence would be praiseworthy if well directed. Waters wear away stone, the wind crumbles the marble, but a woman is not moved till she wishes to be. I never thought that I should dabble in an intrigue of this sort, and I am surprised at the amusement it affords me. I really owe you some gratitude. The few I have met who know you tell me that you are a "nice young man."

Every man has some portion of self love. So his next effort was a passionate denial that he was "nice." When should he meet her? The postman brought him a letter which contained one word—Nimmer! He sent her four pages, a frank and witty description of himself and his friends.

On the day she received this letter a cablegram came to her from the far Mediterranean. Whatever it contained had the effect to cause all restraint to disappear from the tone of her letters. They became charming, and more and more Hillard found himself loving a voice. All his watching, all his traps, came to no successful end. She was too clever for him. He sought the mail department of the great newspaper; the clerk couldn't remember, there were so many calling for mail. Letters passed to and fro daily now, but always she declared that it was impossible for them to meet. No, it was out of the question to dine with him in a restaurant. It was equally out of the question to cook a dinner where she lived, as she and her maid dined at a small restaurant near by. Finally he proposed to bring the dinner all cooked from the club. Two days went by without a sign; then the blue letter came.

GOT MIXED UP IN THE PATHS

Magistrate Dumble acted leniently with a young man of seventeen this morning, who was charged with misappropriating a small amount of money, which he collected for his employer.

The young man was advised as to the proper course to pursue in the future, and left the court without any conviction being registered against him.

WAS STUNNED BY LIGHTNING AND HAD IT'S LEG BROKEN

Mr. W. Howden will probably lose a valuable brood mare as a result of the storm on Wednesday evening.

The mare, with a colt three weeks old, was pasturing on the farm of Mr. Harold Snowden, Monaghan, and when he found her on Thursday morning lying in the pasture field, with one of her fore legs fractured.

It is thought that the mare was stunned by lightning, and in falling broke her leg.

Dr. Rogers was called, but it is feared that the animal will have to be shot.

GROWTH OF PRINCE RUPERT; AN INTERESTING LETTER FROM PETERBORORGH BOY

Mr. Robert Mann of 214 London-st., has received a letter from his son Edward, who is located in Prince Rupert, depicting the many opportunities of the G.T.P. terminus, also the laying out of the city into business, manufacturing and residential sections. Following is the letter;

Prince Rupert, July 17, 1910.

Dear Father.—

The townsite is divided into nine sections, of which 2, 3, 4 and 9 are as yet G.T.P. reserve, that is the G.T.P, still hold them and for some time it will be impossible to procure any property in those sections. Sec. 1 is the business section now and in time it will spread back into section 6. Just now section 5 is partially a business and partially a residential section. No 6 is wholly a residential section and is the best section in town for that purpose. After the railroad comes through and the town has a chance to grow and the street cars are running, the best residential parts will be section 7 and 9, the latter particularly, as on account of its elevation and the smooth surface being especially adapted for that purpose.

This section is on a hill known as Montreal Hill. Its location is very similar to that of Mount Pleasant, (in Vancouver) where the homes of the business men are nearly all located. On the map you will notice Hay's Cove Circle and Seal Cove Circle. Both of these places are, or will be parks. The former is on the townsite of Hay's Creek, a pretty fresh water stream. Seal Cove is the name given to the bay at the end of the island and is a beautiful place.

There are at present several saw mills at Seal Cove, all doing a good business, and there is a large cold storage plant in course of erection. There is good water power there and it is bound to become an important centre. Keep your eye on the map and you'll be able to see why I picked on the lot of my choice for you.

In the south of the town will be located the poorer business section, and the laboring people's dwellings, and naturally all the best residences and outside business houses will locate on the opposite side of the town. You'll find McBride street opposite where I've marked X. At the foot of the street the Government wharf is under construction. This is to be one of the principal streets. You'll notice that its the only one cuttting the full width of the town.

At the mouth of Hay's Cove is to be built the largest dry-docks on the Pacific Coast. The Government has already granted a subsidy and guaranteed their maintenance for 20 years.

6th avenue which has the only plank road yet, is too hilly for hauling and see by an articie in to-night's paper that that road is to be built. This immediately increases the value of the lot. The lot is cleared (but for a few stumps) and is very level. I bought it from Mack for $425, cash equity $370. It had been listed for $450, by taking off commission he let me have it for $425. We changed it Saturday night (with 2 others Mack has near) to $500 and now that the announcement re the road is out it will be shoved up another $50. I don't think I could have got a better bargain in town and you can feel sure of making money on it, and there's this about it—if by any chance I shouldn't be able to sell by next June I'll buy it myself at market value. As I say, the cash equity is $370, so I still have $130 to your credit here. I'll hold it for awhile and may see a chance of using it before long. I thought it better to have the lot put in my name to save time and trouble in negotiating should we have to make a quick sale.

Things are rather quiet just now, but the first of Aug. will see the beginning of a strong movement for the new civic work starts then and that will mean the employment of from two to five hundred men on grading, road making, sidewalks, sewers, waterworks, telephone and electric light, also the G.T.P. are about to reconstruct their docks, the Government wharf is started, the new city hall will be erected shortly, also a new post office.

A hospital is in course of erection and a large school is about completed. All this with the numerous (or rather numberless) private dwellings will keep things with an upward tendency till the railroad gets through.

I think I told you before that the bridge at Lanardi rapids has been the handicap for the road builders. This obstacle is at last overcome and they'll be hauling supplies over it this week some time.

The "Belle of Scotland," a huge ship, landed here last week and is now discharging its cargo of 3000 tons of steel rails. Two months ago the "Belle of Spain" brought 3500 tons and other boats have left us smaller cargoes. These rails are brought around Cape Horn from Sydney, Cape Breton, and this last ship made a record trip in 57 days. I managed to secure several good snap shots of this boat and will send you some views when I find time to develop and print them.

Our weather is nearly perfect despite the knocking received on the subject by the outside and jealous towns, of which Vancouver is the leader. Since the first of July we have had but 2 days rain and the weather man predicts a continuance of this acceptable spell.

Stewart, I presume, forms a topic of interest for eastern papers, and the townsite property has been boomed to a standstill. The prices are so inflated as to prohibit any further movement in town real estate. The mines though are, without doubt, all that is claimed for them. The Roosevelt, Portland and Red Cliffe and Little Joe O.K., are about the pick of the bunch. Our dear relative, Uncle Dan Mann, was here to-day on his way to Stewart and the Bitter Creek country. I'll send you a copy or two of the Optimist, I should send more, but I'm financially close these days.

There's a boat coming in now and I must hie me to the wharf and see if there are any customers to be caught. I'll write you again shortly and will keep you posted continually.

I am,
Your loving son
ED.

REV. J. G. POTTER ACCEPTS THE CALL TO THE MacVICAR MEMORIAL CHURCH, MONTREAL

Delegation From That Church Waited on Presbytery of Peterborough — Committee From St. Andrew's Desired Very Much to Have Pastor Remain Here —Appreciative Words for Mr. Potter.

At a meeting of the Presbytery of Peterborough this morning the call extended to Rev. J. G. Potter from the MacVicar Memorial Church, Montreal, was considered.

The call was supported by an able delegation from Montreal. The Presbytery of Montreal was represented by Rev. Mr. McClennan, and three members of the congregation of the MacVicar Memorial Church.

A THRIVING CHURCH.

Very strong reasons why Mr. Potter should accept the call were advanced by the delegation. The rapid growth of the section of the city in which MacVicar Memorial church is situated were referred to.

It used to be an annex of Montreal, but now is a part of the city proper and has grown in the last ten years from five to forty thousand. The church was established ten years ago and has been growing with that section of the city. There is a large Sabbath school and all the seats of the church are occupied by the congregation.

The members of the congregation are of the better class of people who have moved to that section of the city from older parts of Montreal. The congregation is so large that it will be necessary to add to the capacity of the present church or else build a new one.

The call extended to Mr. Potter was a unanimous one.

LOATH TO LOSE PASTOR.

In reply to these reasons a committee from the congregation of St. Andrew's urged on the Presbytery that Mr. Potter should remain in Peterborough and also read a resolution passed at last night's meeting of the congregation, in which the conviction was expressed that Mr. Potter's work was not finished in Peterborough. The committee spoke of what he had accomplished in St. Andrew's and in the city, and dwelt on the services he had rendered in a public way.

When the call was placed in Mr. Potter's hands he declared his willingness to accept it.

PRESBYTERY'S APPRECIATION.

The members of the Presbytery spoke in high appreciation of Mr. Potter's pastorate and work in Peterborough.

Strong emphasis was placed on his public services, and it was stated that in his departure for Montreal a leader among men was being lost, and one who exerted a splendid influence in moulding the higher thought and life of the city.

Mr. D. Hughes Charles who has been manager of the local office of the Bank of Commerce for the past eight years, coming here from Galt, will retire from that position to become identified with the stock broking firm of Colin, McCuiag & Co., Montreal. He will leave for Montreal about the middle of September.

Mr. Charles wide circle of friends in Peterborough and community will learn with much regret the news of his departure from Peterborough. He is a very popular and public spirited citizen and has also firmly established himself in the affections of the farmers of the vicinity on account of the lively interest he has always taken in matters agricultural.

WAS BAD WRECK

Special to the Review.

Scranton, Pa., Aug. 5.—One of the worst wrecks in recent years on the Lackawanna road occurred early today at Analomink, near Stroudsburg. Fifty-five freight cars were smashed. The fireman is in the hospital at Stroudsburg, probably fatally injured, and Engineer Coglizer and the head brakeman are missing, and it is feared they have been burned to death in the wreck. The train jumped the track, the engine turning on its side. The cars piled up behind the engine and caught fire. Several fire engine companies went to the scene from this city.

FOUND FRIEND IN LINDSAY

Warder: On Tuesday night last a little Barnardo Home girl arrived in Lindsay from Peterborough, expecting to be able to take the regular train through to Victoria Road, where she would be met by a lady, and where she will live for the future. When the little girl got off the train at Lindsay she was informed that owing to the strike she would have to remain in Lindsay over night. She had no money and a kind Samaritan came to her relief in the person of a commercial traveller, who paid for her keep in Hotel Benson over night, and also provided her meals.

MEN FORFEIT PENSION; MORE TROUBLE FEARED

G.T.R. States Plainly That the Privileges Are Suspended.

Process of Taking Striking Trainmen Back Into Company's Employ Goes Very Slowly and All May Not Be at Work For Three Months—Trouble at Bridgeburg Is Not Yet Over and Soldiers Are Kept Handy.

Montreal, Aug. 4.—Two debated points in the Grand Trunk settlement were cleared up yesterday. The company has stated plainly that the strikers return to work minus the pension fund privileges heretofore existing, and it is understood that the return of the men "as soon as possible" means within the next three months.

Reports received last night from various parts of the system indicate that very few men were re-engaged yesterday, but this can be explained to a considerable extent by the necessity of arranging new train schedules to meet the changed conditions. Then, of course, the freight service will take some time to right itself. In Montreal it is said that only one conductor of the fifty who struck was taken on yesterday, and he was given an extra train. A few of the old employes were taken back on the passenger service by Supt. Whittenberg at the Bonaventure Station yesterday morning, but not a single man was taken on at the Point St. Charles freight yards.

Vice-President Fitzhugh of the Grand Trunk, said officially yesterday evening that no one has been dismissed to give place to the men who went out on strike, yet he repeats that all the men will be taken back as soon as possible. A great many gathered at Bonaventure Station Tuesday evening, thinking that they would be taken on at once, but they were disappointed, and the same thing was repeated yesterday. While it is believed the company will eventually re-engage the men, yet there is considerable nervousness displayed at the prospect that many of them may be kept out for weeks without wages and without strike pay. It is believed that many will wander off into the service of other railways or into other employment.

More Trouble Feared.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Aug. 4.—So far as can be learned, all Grand Trunk men who went out on strike will be at work by to-night. Last night eight crews were on duty and regular day crews are expected to be called today. Special railway police still guard the local railway station, as well as the yards.

More strike trouble is feared at Bridgeburg, according to word received from there yesterday. Supt. Cunningham of the Grand Trunk met the strikers when, with their overalls and jumpers, they reached the Bridgeburg morning.

"You fellows," announced the superintendent, according to versions of the later, "have been dictating to me long enough; now, I'll do some dictating myself." Cunningham is the official who announced here that if any more cars were stoned the Grand Trunk would abandon Niagara Falls for passenger purposes and take all through trains around by Port Colborne and Bridgeburg.

After his meeting with the men Cunningham immediately communicated with Lt.-Col. Hill, commanding the troops on duty at Bridgeburg, and requested him not to send the soldiers home.

Nothing Doing at London.

London, Aug. 4.—None of the G.T.R. strikers have been re-engaged here, pending instructions from Montreal.

Delay at Brockville.

Brockville, Aug. 4.—Though the striking trainmen and conductors at this point have reported for duty, their services have not yet been accepted. Agent Hatton has not as yet received any instruction from headquarters to take them back. Freight traffic has been as a standstill here for the past 48 hours.

CURTIS D. WILBUR.

Los Angeles, Aug. 2.—It is said, apparently with justification, that Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge of the Juvenile Court, is doing more for the betterment of children whom the average man calls incorrigible than any other person in the country. Judge Wilbur is firmly convinced that a criminal tendency in a child is rather physical than natural, and he is guided accordingly.

Many physicians attend Judge Wilbur's court daily to offer advice free in the treatment of "bad" boys and girls.

The Judge discusses the condition of the children with the mothers and treats all subjects with a frankness that at first might be disconcerting. He attends meetings of women's clubs and tries to educate mothers so that they will be better able to save the children. His office is crowded after court hours by women who wish to talk about their children. He seems to remember all the details pertaining to the history of each cild and calls them familiarly by name. If he suggests an operation it is because he knows from experience that surgery has proved beneficial. The mothers trust to his knowledge and several surprising changes of child metamorphosis have resulted.

HE HAS NOT CONFESSED; CRIPPIN SEEMS HAPPY

Crippen Has He Will Not Talk Till He Reaches England.

He Denies Rumor That He Had Admitted the Murder of Belle Elmore—Inspector Dew Has a Hard Time Avoiding the Reporters Who Are Staying In Quebec—Hundreds Ask For Passes to See the Jail.

Quebec, Aug. 4.—Inspector Dew of Scotland Yard will neither deny or confirm the report widely published yesterday that Dr. Crippen has confessed to the murder of Belle Elmore. To pressmen who called last evening at the St. George, where he has apartments, the inspector sent an attendant with a message that he would not be seen. A note was sent up to him asking for a statement, and the word came back, "I have no comment to make."

At the Quebec jail, where Crippen is confined, a correspondent was told by Governor Morin that he was not aware of any confession, and he entirely discredits the report. No persons, excepting officials, are being allowed in to see Crippen, but reporters was allowed to send a note to him, asking whether he had anything to say to the press. The reply was, "I will say nothing, till I get to England."

"He always seems cheerful enough," commented Governor Morin, referring to Crippen. The little doctor's contented demeanor is taken to indicate that he has a card still up his sleeve, which he will play at the proper time."

The Scotland Yard man went shopping yesterday, and purchased new wearing apparel for Dr. Crippen and Ethel Leneve. The clothing was purchased with the $10 found on the doctor, and a small amount found in the possession of the woman, when they were arrested. After performing this domestic chore the great detective went sailing on the St. Charles River, accompanied by Chief of Police McCarthy.

The appearance of a reporter on the horizon sets the detective twitching, so averse is he to publicity. It was gathered at the St. George yesterday that he is to desert that place to-day, and go in hiding, to escape the newspaper men.

The girl, who is charged jointly with Crippen with the murder of his former wife, is rapidly recovering, and now spends much time walking about her ward in the jail infirmary.

Appeals to the sheriff for pasees to visit the jail are pouring in, and the attendance numbers about 300 a day, mostly woman. They all want to see Crippen, not the jail, says Governor Morin.

The jewelry, including four diamond rings, found on Crippen, which has been identified as the property of the missing woman, has been turned over to Deputy Sheriff Begin for safe keeping.

Says Dew Told Him.

London, Aug. 4.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Chronicle's correspondent says that Dew told him Crippen confessed that he killed his wife in a quarrel. Relatives have received the following cable from Miss Leneve. "I had seen or heard nothing until the cruel blow fell. I am returning home." Ethel.

Scotland Yard entirely discredits the reported confession of Crippen.

A Remarkable Tribute.

Belfast, Aug. 4.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Rev. William McCaughan's funeral was one of the most remarkable ever seen in Belfast. At the crowded memorial service in May street chapel, the lord mayor was present. The moderator of the Presbyterian Church of Ireland and several ministers conducted the service, whereat eulogistic speeches were delivered. The procession was over a mile long, including 250 clergy of all denominations, members of corporation and public bodies. The route to the cemetery was lined with sympathizers, despite the incessant rain.

THEY WANT NEW TARIFF; FARMERS ARE ANGRY

The Western Farmers Present Memorial to the Premier.

Dr. Smith, in Behalf of Grain Growers at Weyburn, Sask., Declares That High Protection Is a System of Tribute Levied by Manufacturers on Their Fellows and Makes For Dishonesty.

Weyburn, Sask., Aug. 4.—The memorial on the tariff, presented to Sir Wilfrid yesterday by the grain growers of southern Saskatchewan, still maintains a strong tone of objection to the tariff in general, and a duty on agricultural implements in particular.

Dr. Smith, who spoke to the memorial, claimed that Sir John A. Macdonald introduced the word protection in lieu of the words "Thief and robber." Mr. Smith declared that manufacturers, under the protective system, not only enjoyed the profits of his own labor, but also secured a portion of the profits of the other man's labor. In the case of the farmer, he asked, was it not a crime to pass such a law? If it was wrong for the individual to rob, it was wrong to make robbery legal. "Protection is a great wrong. It makes nations dishonest with one another. It makes individuals selfish and dishonest. It teaches the mischievous principal that we are to expect to receive value without giving value in return."

If it was wrong for the Conservative Government to pass the law, is it not also wrong for the Liberal Government to perpetuate the same law?

Continuing, Mr. Smith commended the course adopted by Sir Wilfrid, in not seeking for reciprocity at Washington, but, now that President Taft had taken a step towards securing closer trade relations between the two countries, they hoped he would be able to bring about some equitable arrangement. They regarded the duty on agricultural implements as a special tax upon the farmer.

The grain growers were willing to pay their share towards the revenue of the country, and Mr. Smith asserted that a revenue tariff provides incidental protection, and should be sufficient to satisfy the most exacting. The manufacturer asked protection to infant industries, and afterwards as a matter of vested rights.

"If we are free men, treat us as such. If we are slaves, we ask freedom. If this be refused, we demand it. Our resources are not exhausted."

ONE MAN IN PRISON NOW

Toledo, Ohio, Aug. 4—Notwithstanding that Travis Wilson, a negro, is in jail at Monroe charged with the murder of Sheriff Edmond Dull of Monroe, posses continue to search the country in and around Monroe. One negro who refused to give his name was arrested after a hard fight with a posse, just before noon yesterday. Just before the melee, the negro received a slight gun wound in the neck.

While Wilson has been identified by the man who was assaulted and thrown off the car when Dull was sent for, the majority of officials believe that he is an innocent party. He is being held, however.

The body of Sheriff Dull, who died at the hospital here yesterday, was taken back to Monroe at noon in a private car for burial.

Two Men Injured at Hamilton.

Hamilton, Aug. 4.—Late last night Chester Fickley, 315 West Hunter street, and Ramsay Wills, 25 Orchard hill, were struck by an automobile on the Dundas road and seriously injured. The two men were walking along just near the Globe Hotel, when the auto swooped down on them. Fickley was cut severely about the head, and his clothes torn from shoulders to hips, and it is feared he is injured internally. Wills also had his clothes torn, and was thrown heavily against a telegraph pole. The doctors claim that a few of his ribs are broken. The autoists did not stop, and, owing to the spot where the accident occurred being dark, the number could not be distinguished.

The injured men were hurried to the City Hospital.

IF IT WAS NOT THE WOMEN

Madrid, Aug. 4.—Field Marshal Lopez Dominguez, who is ex-president of the Senate, and ex-Premier, said yesterday that he would support Premier Canalejas in his struggle for religious reforms, but he doubted the success of the movement, on account of the immense power of the clergy and their influence over the women, who, he declared, are compelled under the domination of their confessors.

"The openness with which Premier Canalejas is conducting the campaign," said the field marshal, "is one of the best features of the situation. He wants Spain and the world to know what he is doing. If he succeeds he will have rendered an immense service to Spain."

SOVEREIGNTY V. TEEATY RIGHTS

London, Aug. 4.—At The Hague fisheries conference yesterday, Elihu Root, replying for the United States, said that the importance of the dispute, which without an arbitration tribunal could previously only have been decided by war, justified long speeches made with respect to the first question, concerning the right of Great Britain to regulate the fisheries carried on by Americans. Mr. Root declared that Britain looked upon this question from the standpoint of her sovereignty, while the United States regarded it from the viewpoint of the right accorded her by treaty. America, he said, recognized British sovereignty, but opposed any regulations that were incompatable with the treaty of 1818.

BOYCOTT ON U. S. GOODS

Chinese Merchants Take Revenge For Treatment at 'Frisco.

Canton, China, Aug. 4.—A boycott on American lines to the one which several years ago caused millions of dollars' damage to American trade in China, has been proclaimed here, in response to complaints of the treatment of Chinese in America.

The specific cause of complaint on this occasion is the objection of the Chinese of San Francisco to the detention sheds on Angel Island in San Francisco Bay, which they have been endeavoring for some time to have removed to San Francisco itself, in order to secure better treatment for arriving Chinese.

The boycott is proclaimed by the Chinese Self-Government Society of Canton, an organization conducting a propaganda for "China for the Chinese" and for Government reform to which Chinese in San Francisco appeal by letter.

An appeal has been issued to Chinese abroad, asking them to co-operate in the boycott.

Rammed Wooden Vessel.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 4.—The steel steamer Chippewa rammed the old wooden steamer Albion off Westpoint, north of the entrance to Seattle Harbor early yesterday.

The Chippewa was returning to Seattle from Everett after carrying an excursion party to Vancouver, B.C., and back, and had no passengers.

Ten passengers bound for Everett were aboard the Albion, but as far as known, none of them were injured. The hull of the wooden vessel was pierced by the bow of the heavier steamer and the two were wedged tightly together. The passengers on the Albion, which will likely be a total loss, were transferred to the Chippewa.

Reports indicate that the damage to the Chippewa is not serious. The Chippewa is a steel steamer of 996 tons. She was built at Toledo, Ohio, in 1900, and is owned by the Puget Sound Navigation Co.

BABE BORN IN A COFFIN

Paris, Aug. 1.—A newspaper here reports a remarkeble story from Pauillac. Mme. Bobin, a passenger on the steamer La Plata, from Senegal, was landed at that port suffering with what was supposed to have yellow fever. She was placed in a Lazaretto, where her condition became worse, and finally the doctors certified she was dead, and she was buried. One of the nurses, however, doubted that the woman was dead, and communicated with Mme. Bobin's father, who caused the body of his daughter to be exhumed when it was found that the supposed dead woman had given birth to a child in the coffin. An autopsy showed that Mme. Bobin did not have yellow fever, and that she had died from suffocation after she had died from suffocation she was buried.

MR. ROBERT E. SPEER, D.D.

New York, August 1.—When Dr. Robert E. Speer, one of the four secretaries of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, returns from abroad soon, he will receive congratulations of his friends, and particularly of his fellow laborers in the Presbyterian Building, No. 156 Fifth avenue. When Dr. Speer departed for Europe in May he was only plain Mr. Speer, now he has the distinction of being the only layman except one in the United States who is a doctor of divinity.

It was during the recent World Missionary Conference at Edinburgh, Scotland, that the University of Edinburgh conferred upon Mr. Speer the title. A CHRISTIAN PIG

London, Aug. 1. — Miss Emily Hampton, of Nazeing, was summoned on Friday for keeping a pig in a manner dangerous to health. The Nuisance Inspector testified that he found the pig occupying the whole of one room in the house of the defendant. The animal was lying between clean sheets, on a feather bed, covered with a white lace counterpane, with his head resting on a pillow. The room was furnished like the usual parlor, and there were illuminated texts on the walls. The inspector said further that he found the defendant kneeling at the bedside and kissing the pig and calling it a naughty boy because it had eaten a small portion of its pillow.

Miss Hampton pleaded that she had educated the pig as a Christian. She had reared it from infancy. When young it used to occupy the sofa. It had always asked to be let out when it wanted to take the fresh air. It never kicked the clothes off the bed, and was quiet and peaceable. Ladies and gentlemen came in carriages to see it. The magistrate gave Miss Hampton six weeks in which to find fresh lodgings.

THURSDAY, AUG. 4, 1910.

THE REASON

At last a reason has been discovered why the Board of Health and Council are allowing the garbage question to be neglected.

THEY ARE TOO TENDER HEARTED TO KILL THE MAGGOTS. THEY DO NOT BELIEVE IN CRUELTY TO FLIES.

However, it is not true that they are going to offer a reward for the most neatly kept garbage pile and for the fattest maggots raised.

THE WAY TO POPULARITY

The women are commencing to slobber over Dr. Crippen. His cell looks like a flower garden and he is busy reading Shakespeare. The girl he led astray is also busy wiping eyes that are red with weeping, and there are a lot of bones somewhere, and a lot of decayed human flesh which he is supposed to be able to explain. But why the flowers from the ladies? Apparently, from the story of noted murderers in the past, the sure way to become popular with the women is to kill some one, burn some one, poison some one, be arrested, and charged with murder.

A WILL O' THE WISP

When a mad dog ran across the bridge from Niagara Falls he bit another dog. The bite took. As a result half the dogs in Ontario were muzzled. But they kept biting through their muzzles. The muzzles generally worn were discarded, and when the dog snapped thereafter he bit at air. Now that is only a harmless exercise.

What is the matter with the Lemieux Act? It was passed with the idea of keeping capital and labor from biting each other.

It was like the bad muzzle. It was worse. The public, the long suffering public got bit.

"The public be damned." That's what a great American railway magnate said years ago, and this four word classic is still remembered by living action. What is necessary is a new act, a new muzzle, something that will let the working man secure justice without stopping the wheels of commerce and making the innocent public suffer. The present Lemieux Act is a will o' the wisp apparently. Give us something more substantial.

SOCIALISM

The Socialists who were charged with being implicated in a disturbance took the witness box to give evidence in Montreal. The first witness was not allowed to testify. He could not take the oath because he didn't have any belief of a future existence. The second believed in God, but, he, too, thought that when we were dead it is all over, and was asked to step aside. The third believed in remorse. He was allowed to testify.

These men were street speakers. They were red-tie socialists whose ambition was to move the masses against the classes. Christ as a Socialist. However, He was a different kind. The word socialism is only now emerging from the slough of mud and despond, into which men just like these fellows in Montreal would throw it. There are also socialists and socialists. The bomb throwing devil, the king shooting, law hating disturber is no true type. The socialist who believes in evolution rather than revolution is the better one. Socialism will not be denied. Its day is coming. It must be reckoned with. From the sane and sober socialist will undoubtedly come much of the relief needed in the 20th century by the masses. There has yet risen no great man ready to lead. When he comes socialism will walk out into the open. The church must not hold aloof. The church must enliven and quicken socialism if it would fill its mission well, and socialism must not fight the church if it also would succeed.

THE HEROINE

Detroit, Aug. 4.—In an effort to save her husband from death by permitting an artery in her own body to be opened and sewed to one in her husband's body, Mrs. Clay Wildermuth, of Kalamazoo, lies in the Borgess Hospital seriously ill, and her husband is dead. Doctors decided that the operation was necessary to save the man's life, and it was performed yesterday. When an artery in Mrs. Wildermuth's arm was opened the blood poured into the weakened body of the husband, but the sacrifice was unsuccessful, and he died without regaining consciousness.

Yes, and many a woman whose name is never in the paper is a heroine no less noble than Mrs. Clay Wildermuth. It is the daily sacrifice. The dreary, humdrum existence; the selfish husband, the large family, the cross child, the lack of necessities, the hard work. She never sees her name in the paper, indeed, sometimes she cannot spare the necessary money to buy a paper. She has made a mistake. She thought she married a man. Its a brute she wedded instead. But she works on and never lets the outside world know her sufferings. Don't you think that woman is a heroine.

FASTING

Thirty years ago to-day Dr. Tanner was upon his celebrated fast doing doing his thirty-seventh day. Fasts to-day are common. A man from Cleveland last fall to cure an ailment, abstained from all food for 51 and a half days. He was under Bernar Macfadden's care in his sanitarium at Battle Creek. The old adage used to be; Feed a cold and starve a fever. Now both colds and fevers are starved. The civilized world is gradually learning the lesson that stuffing at the table, eating at all hours is responsible for headaches and billiousness, the blues and lack of energy. A few days' fast now and then, drinking only water, would lend many days' life and much new vision and hope to the average man and woman.

SIDE LIGHTS

A Question

Souls destined to o'er leap the vulgar lot,
And move the world unto the scheme of God
Have a fore consciousness of their high doom,
As men are known to shiver at the heart,
When the cold shadow of some coming ill,
Creeps slowly o'er their spirits unawares,
Hath good less power of prophecy than ill?

Daily Ontario, Belleville.

The railways are not to have a monopoly of the freight business of this country. That is evident, not only from the Government policy of improving the water routes, but also from the steady increase of canal traffic. Railway freights in Canada increased from 36,000,000 to 66,800,000 tons between 1900 and 1909, while canal freights increased from 5,000,000 to 33,700,000 tons. Of this increse 14,000,000 tons was contributed by the Sault Ste. Marie canal.

HIGH PRICED EXPERTS.

Specialists Who Charge Enormous Fees For Their Services.

A great many people cannot understand why professional experts charge such enormous prices for their services—why an eminent surgeon, for example, says Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine, should charge $5,000 or even $10,000 for a single operation or a great law specialist like Elihu Root $2,500 for a few hours' work in cross examining a witness.

They do not take into consideration that the surgeon has spent years in learning how to perform quickly and efficiently the difficult operation which saves a life that might have been lost in less skilled hands.

Much of the training of the specialist is to enable him to meet the unusual, the unexpected demand. The surgeon trains for the rare operation, the possible emergency. He knows that there are times when it is knowing what the ordinary surgeon did not think it worth while to learn that may save a life. There are surgeons now living who never had a dozen emergency cases in all their experience which called into play the utmost power and skill of which they are capable, but it was these few extremely dangerous operations which gave them their great reputation and enabled them to get enormous fees.

It is not the good surgeon, but the superb operator, the man who knows a little more about anatomy, who has a little steadier nerve, a more acute touch, a little better education, that is sought to perform the delicate operation in the emergency when life hangs by a thread.

John J. Brown, a youthful inventor, of Brooks, Ont., was refused admission to the United States at Port Huron on Monday.

CATTLE MARKETS.

American Cattle Markets Dull With Prices Unchanged—Hogs Steady.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Aug. 3.—(Special.)—A more active trade is doing in this department of the live stock trade, and the indications are that it will continue thruout this month, as the bulk of the ocean freight space from this port is engaged. But up to the present there has been no demand for space for September shipment, for which agents are asking 30s to Liverpool and 25s to 27s to London. Cables of late from the leading foreign markets have been weaker on account of increased home supplies, and if prices continue to decline it might have a tendency to check the movement of northwest ranch cattle in that direction. The exports of cattle for the month of July were the largest of the season so far. The total number shipped was 12,531 head, showing an increase of 4655, as compared with the previous month, but a decrease of 1421 as compared with the same month last year. The total exports from the opening of navigation to July 31 were 27,764 head, as against 38,568 for the corresponding period a year ago, showing a decrease of 10,804 head, which is due to a large extent to the falling off in the exports of American cattle from this port, as there have been only 23 head shipped during the past three months, as against 5158 for the same period last year.

At the Canadian Pacific live stock market this morning the offerings of live stock were 1200 cattle, 950 sheep and lambs, 1510 hogs and 400 calves, an easier feeling developing in the market for cattle on account of the larger supply coming forward, and prices were fully ¼c per lb. lower than on Monday. The weather was warm again, and this tended to curtail the demand from butchers to some extent; consequently only a fair trade was done, and quite a number were left over. Choice steers sold at 6c to 6¼c; good at 5c to 5¾c; fairly good at 5c to 5¼c; fair at 4½c to 4¾c, and common at 4c to 4¼c per lb. Cows were very plentiful and met only with a fair sale at 3½c to 4½c, and bulls brought from 3c to 5c per lb. Another feature of the trade was the decidedly weak feeling in the market for hogs, and prices, as compared with those of Monday, show a decline of 50c to 75c per hundred pounds. This was attributed to the increased supplies and the fact that the strike on the Grand Trunk Railway was settled, which tended to curtail the demand from packers some, and trade even at the reduced prices was not active. Sales of selected lots were made at $9.50 to $9.75 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars, and a few lots were delivered on contracts made earlier in the week at $10.25. Supplies of small meats were not so plentiful as they were earlier in the week, but they were ample to fill all requirements, and prices ruled steady. Sheep sold at 3½c to 3¾c per lb.; lambs at $3.50 to $5.25 each, with calves at from $3 to $10 each, as to size and quality.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

In a fashionable quarter of the city there stood a brownstone house, with grotesque turrets, winding steps and glaring polished red tiles. There was a touch of the gothic, of the renaissance, of the old English manor; just a touch, however, a kind of blind man's buff of a house. A very rich man lived here, but for ten months in the year he and his family fluttered about the social centers of the world. And, with a house like this on his hands, one could scarce blame him. Twice a week during this absence a caretaker came in, flourished a feather duster and went away again. Society reporters always referred to this house as "the palatial residence."

This morning a woman stood in the alcove window and looked down into the glistening street. The venetian red of her hair trapped the reflected sunlight from the opposite windows, and two little points of silver danced in her blue eyes. Ah, but her eyes were blue—blue as spring water in the morning, blue as the summer sky seen through a cleft in the mountains, blue as lapis lazuli, with the same fibers of gold. And every feature and contour of the face harmonized with the marvelous hair and the wonderful eyes; a beautiful face, warm, dreamy, engaging, mobile. It was not the face of a worldly woman; neither was it the face of a girl. It was too emotional for the second, and there was not enough control for the first.

But the prophecy of laughter did not come to pass. The little wrinkles faded, the mouth grew sad, and the silver points no longer danced in her eyes. The pain in her heart was always shadowing. She had seen her fairest dream beaten and crumpled upon the reef of disillusion.

Yet again the smile renewed itself. She was a creature of varying moods. She twisted and untwisted the newspaper. Should she? Ought she? Had she not always regretted these singular impulses? And yet what harm to read this letter and return it to the sender? She was so lonely here. It was like being among a strange people, so long ago was it that her foot had touched this soil. Was it possible that she was twenty-five? Was there not some miscount, and was it not fifteen instead? Would not this war of wisdom and folly be decided ere long?

She opened the paper and smoothed out the folds. "Mme. Angot—There is a letter for you in the mail department of this office." It was so droll. It was unlike anything she had ever heard of—a personal inquiry column, where Cupids and Psyches billed and cooed. The merest chance had thrown the original inquiry under her notice. Her answer was an impulse to which she had given no second thought till too late. She ought to have ignored it. But she was lonely; the people she knew were out of town, and the jest might amuse her.

This man was in all probability a gentleman, since he was a member of a gentlemen's club. But second thought convinced her that this proved nothing. Men are often called gentlemen out of compliment to their ancestors. Still, if this man only saw the affair from her angle of vision, the grotesque humor of it and not the common vulgar intrigue! She hesitated, as well she might. Supposing that eventually he found out who she was? That would never, never do. No one must know that she was in America, about to step into the wildest of wild adventures. No; she must not be found out. The king, who had been kind to her, and the court must never know. From their viewpoint they would have declared that she was about to tarnish a distinguished name, to outrage the oldest aristocracy in Europe, the court of Italy. But she had her own opinion; what she proposed to do was in itself harmless and innocent. But this gentleman who leaned out of the window? She had seen the match flare in the young man's face. Was it the face she had seen in that flash of light that interested her sufficiently to risk the note? Against the dark of the night it had appeared for an instant, clean, crisp, ruddy as a cameo. The face warranted confidence.

She had sung because she had been happy, happy with that transient happiness which at times was her portion. Could she ever judge another man by his looks? She believed not. How she had run! The man, bareheaded, giving chase and the burly policeman across the street!

She stepped down from the alcove, wound the gray veil round the riding crop and tossed them into a corner. Somehow in the daylight the magic was gone from his face, for she had recognized him that first day in the park. He rode well. She touched a bell. A maid appeared.

"Bettina, you will go to the office of this newspaper and inquire for a letter addressed to Mme. Angot. And be quick, for I may change my mind."

The maid was back in a half hour.

"There was a letter, then?" The points were dancing again in the blue eyes.

"You may go. Perhaps," and Bettina's mistress smiled—"perhaps I may let you read it and answer it after I am done with it. That would be rather neat."

The slight nod was a dismissal, and the maid went about her duties, which were not many in this house.

Meanwhile the lady with the venetian hair toyed with the letter. Club paper! Evidently he was not afraid to trust her. But would he amuse her? The contents gave her a genuine surprise. She ran to the window. Italian! It was written in Italian, with all the flourishes of an Italian born. She turned to the signature—Hillard. So he had signed his name in full? She ruminated. How came such a name to belong to a man who wrote Italian so beautifully? She looked at the signature again. John—Giovanni. She would call him Giovanni. She had been rather clever. To have had the wit to look in the library for the blue book and the club list—not every woman would have thought of that. Then a new inspiration came to her. She sent Bettina for the card basket. She scattered the contents upon the floor and sat down Turkish-wise. She sorted the cards carefully, and, lo, she was presently rewarded. She held up the card in triumph. He had called at this house on Thanksgiving day. He was known, then, to the master and mistress. Very good. She now gave her full attention to the letter, which she had not yet perused:

To the Lady in the Fog:

To begin with, let me say that I, too, have laughed. But there was some degree of chagrin in my laughter. On my word of honor, it was a distinct shock to my sense of dignity when I saw that idiotic personal of mine in the paper. It is my first offense of the kind, and I am really ashamed. But the situation was not ordinary. Ordinary women do not sing in the streets after midnight. As you could not possibly be ordinary, my offense has greater magnitude. To indite a personal to a gentlewoman! A thousand pardons! I doubted that it would come under your notice, and, even if it did, I was sure that you would ignore it. To find a woman with an appreciable sense of humor is rare. To find one who couples this with initiation is rarer still. How you found out my name confuses me.

"Indeed!" murmured the lady.

Doubtless you have the club list in your house. Do you know, when the letter was brought me I saw nothing unusual about the address. It was only when I began this letter that I comprehended how clever you were. There are half a dozen J. H.'s at the club. I tell you truthfully over my own name that your voice startled me.

I was startled because my thoughts were far away. I was dreaming of Italy, where I was born, though there is no more Italian blood in my veins than there is in yours.

"What made him think that, I wonder?"

I therefore write this in a language familiar to us both, certain you could not sing Lecocq's songs in Italian if you did not speak and understand it thoroughly. Signora or signorina, whichever it may be, have we no mutual friends? Are you not known to some one who knows me—some one who will speak for me, my character, my habits?

"It is rather a dull letter so far," said the lady.

You say you sang because at that moment you were happy. This implies that you are not always so. Surely with a voice like yours one cannot possibly be unhappy. If only I might meet you! Will you not do me that honor? Isn't there just a little pure, healthy romance waiting to be given life? Your voice haunts me. Out of every silence it comes to me—"She is so innocent, so youthful!"

She held up the card in triumph.

JOHN HILLARD.

The letter fluttered into her lap. She leaned on her elbows. It was not a bad letter, and she rather liked the boyish tone of it. Nothing vulgar peered out from between the lines. Did he really love music? He must, for it was not every young man who could pick out the melody of an old, forgotten opera. Rather than tempt fate she decided not to answer this letter. It would be neither wise nor useful.

Romance! The word came back to her. With an unmusical laugh she stood up, shaking the letter to the floor. Romance! She was no longer a girl. She was a woman of five and twenty, and what should a woman know of romance? Ah, there had been a time when all the world was romance—romance; when the night breeze had whispered it under her casement window, when the lattice climbing roses had breathed it, when the moon and the stars had spelled it. Romance! She hated the word not less than she hated the Italian language, the Italian people, the country itself. She spurned the letter with her foot and fed the newspaper to the fire.

She went downstairs to the piano and played with strong feeling. Presently she began to sing a haunting, melancholy song by Abt. She was mistress of every tone, every shade, every expression.

The door opened gradually. Crash! The music was over.

"Bettina? Bettina, are you listening?"

"I am always listening." Bettina squeezed into the room. "It is beautiful, beautiful! To sing like that! There will be kings and dukes at your feet!"

"Enough!"

"Pardon, signora, I forgot. But listen. I bring a message. A boy came to say that the rehearsal will be at 4 this afternoon. It is now after 12."

"So late? We must be off."

"And the letter upstairs on the floor?"

"Some day, Bettina, you will enter the forbidden chamber, and I shall have to play Bluebeard. This time, however, I do not mind. Leave it there or burn it," indifferently.

Bettina knew her mistress. She thought best to leave the letter where it lay, forgotten for the time being.

CHAPTER IV.

BLINDFOLDED.

FOR two days the club steward only nodded when Hillard came in. He had no letters to present.

"I am thirty-three years old," Hillard mused as he sought the reading room. "Downtown I am looked upon as a man of affairs, a business man, with the care of half a dozen fortunes on my hands. Now, what's the matter with me? I begin to tremble when I look that sober old steward in the face. If he had handed me a letter tonight I should have had to lean against the wall for support. This will never do at all. I have not seen her face; I do not know her name. For all I know she may be this Leddy Lightfinger. No; that would be impossible. Leddy Lightfinger would have made an appointment. What possesses me to dwell in this realm of fancy, which is less tangible than a cloud of smoke?" He smoked thoughtfully. "Or am I romantic? To create romance out of nothing—I used to do that when I was a boy. But I'm a boy no longer. Or am I a boy thirty-three years old? She does not answer my letter. Sensible woman. Well, well," reaching for the London Illustrated News, "let's see what the society folks have been doing."

He dropped the paper. There was really nothing new in the world. If Giovanni returned to Italy in the spring he was of a mind to go with him. He looked up and was glad to see Merrihew in the doorway.

"Been looking for you, Jack. Want your company tonight. Kitty Killigrew is giving a little bite to eat after the performance and has asked me to bring you along. Will you come?"

"With pleasure, Dan. Are you dining with any one tonight?" Hillard was lonesome.

"Yes. A little bridge till 11."

"You're hopeless. I can see you in limbo, matching coffin plates with Charon. I'll hunt you up at 11."

"Heard the talk?"

"About what?"

"Why, some one in the club has been using the agony column. The J. H.'s are being guyed unmercifully, and you'll come in for it presently. It's a case of wine on the man who did it."

To be continued.

IDEA FOR WOMEN

Tells How Radiant Hair Can Easily Adorn any Head

It's a mighty good thing for the women of Canada that Parisian Sage can now be obtained in every town of consequence.

No preparation for the hair has done so much to stop falling hair and eradicate dandruff and make women's hair beautiful as Parisian Sage.

Parisian Sage is the only certain destroyer of the dandruff microbe which is the cause of 90 per cent. of hair trouble.

These pernicious, persistent and destructive little devils thrive on the ordinary hair tonics.

Parisian Sage is such an extraordinary and quick acting rejuvenator that Wm. Madill, druggist, who is the agent in Peterborough, guarantees it to cure dandruff, stop falling hair and itching scalp in two weeks or money back

Parisian Sage is most daintily perfumed, it is an ideal preparation, not sticky or greasy.

It is a magnificent dressing for women who desire luxuriant, lustrous hair that compels admiration.

And a large bottle of Parisian Sage costs only 50 cents at Wm. Madill's and at leading druggists all over Canada. The girl with the Auburn hair is on every package. Made in Canada by Giroux Mfg. Co., Fort Erie., Ont., who fill mail orders, all charges prepaid.

STORM WAS A FIERCE ONE

The storm last night was probably the severest electrical storm of the season.

The lightning came bright and fast but from the sound of the thunder the bolts were some distance away although there were two or three explosions that seemed very close at hand.

As far as can be learned there was no damage by lightning in the city limits.

CREW OF TORONTO FLYER NOT TAKEN BACK WITH OTHER LOCAL EMPLOYEES

For some reason or other that is not explicitly stated, it is said, the striking crew of the G.T.R. Toronto flyer, which leaves Peterborough at 7.10 in the morning, have not been taken on their train, although they expected to go back with the other men who resumed their duties on the settlement of the strike. The men of this train, Conductor Haskill, Baggageman McLean and Brakeman Monk, are the only Peterborough employees of the road who have not been taken back.

They were informed by Trainmaster McMillan that their services were not required at present, and he acted on instructions from Divisional Superintendent Lynch.

What the cause of this turn of affairs is, is not definitely known, it is claimed. It is stated that the strike breakers were taken on on a three months' contract, and this is given as the reason, but it seems strange that this should apply to certain trains and not to others.

This condition of affairs existed at several points on the Grand Trunk system

GAVE WRONG NAME TO MAN BEHIND THE BAR

It was blacklist day at the police court this morning.

One member of the society was fined $10.00 after he had pleaded guilty to transgressing yesterday. Costs were added, and the full amount, $14.85, was ordered to be paid in fifteen days.

The accused offered the unsolicited explanation, that while in Port Hope he procured the liquor, but it seems that he visited a local hotel, and by giving an assumed name he was served with a "whiskey," and also a "beer." He left the bar and later returned, but during his absence the bartender ascertained that the man was on the prohibited list, and refused to supply him. He also 'phoned License Inspector Stewart and the case this morning came as a sequel.

Several witnesses, who were at the bar at the time, were present at court, but were not called.

ONE MAN MISSING.

Another case which was enlarged until Friday, Aug. 12th, promises to be productive of some interesting evidence.

Two men are charged with supplying another blacklister with liquor. One was on hand this morning and pleaded not guilty, but the other, it is understood, is fighting shy of the summons.

W. H. Moore prosecuted, and Mr. F. D. Kerr is acting for the accused, who appeared this morning.

HAVE PASSED ENTRANCE INTO FACULTIES EXAMS

The following is the list of the Peterborough candidates who have passed on one or more parts for entrance into the faculties of education:—

M. Anderson (part 2), H. E. Balfour (parts A. and B.), E. M. Connor (part 2), D. Fessenden (part 1), G. D. Mowat (part 1), C. H. Park (part 2), L. Park (part 1), K. E. Read (part 1), C. Young (part 1.)

The examination passed is indicated after each name. The certificates of those who passed and the statements of marks of those who failed will be mailed to the principals and inspectors in the course of a week. As in the other examinations no appeal can be allowed to candidates whose papers are stamped as having been re-read. In other cases of failure appeals will not refused if made before Sept. 1, and accompanied by the fee of $2. In view of all the precautions taken, however, it is unlikely that such appeals would be successful.

BABY BIRDS WILL HOLD THE BOARDS AT THIS MEETING

There will be a baby show at the meeting of the Peterborough Poultry Association to-night in the Association's hall, Simcoe street.

Every member is expected to bring a pair of spring chickens, and it is anticipated that there will be a line-up of barnyard birds tempting enough to make Jack Johnson jump out of the ring at the most critical stage.

The relative development of the chickens will be taken up.

Mr. H C. Duff, the representative in this district for the department of agriculture, will give an address of vital interest to all poultrymen.

UMBRELLA STOPPED RUNAWAY

A runaway occurred at 11.30 this morning.

A horse and buggy in charge of a small boy were left standing outside of Dr. Morgan's residence. The boy was standing at the head of the horse holding it by the reins near the bit, when it made a sudden break for liberty.

When a lady brandishing an umbrella, however, rushed out into the street the horse deemed descretion the better part of valor and quietly came to a halt.

The damage to the lines of the fire alarm system of the Bell and Machine Telephone Companies and the Otonabee and Peterborough Light and Power Companies as a result of the storm of last night was very slight, and only minor repairs were necessary to-day.

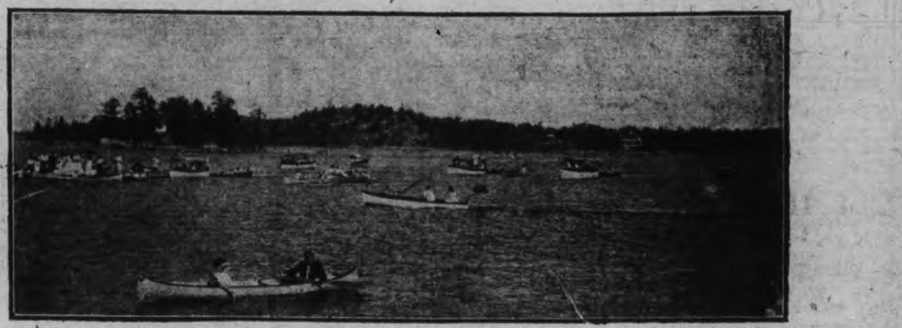
OPENING OF THE FUTURE WATERWAY OF CANADA

Reprinted From Rod and Gun.

Kawartha, that charming Indian term applied to the picturesque system of lakes and rivers, together with the surrounding country of the Trent Valley Waterway, is the red man's symbol for "Bright Waters and Happy Lands." The work of canalizing this waterway, which extends from Trenton, on the Bay of Quinte, Lake Ontario, to the lower end of Georgian Bay, near the towns of Waubaushene and Midland, is progressing rapidly. While the object of constructing these canals is to provide a shorter transportation route by water between the vast granary of the north-west and the Atlantic sea-board, and to assist in developing the country through which it passes, it will also open up one of the finest pleasure boat waterways in the world.

A trip through this beautiful chain of lakes, the gems of the Highlands of Ontario, the country of little lakes rivers and waterfalls; through the mammoth hydraulic lift or elevator locks, those modern triumphs of engineering, the largest of their type in the world and the only examples on this side of the Atlantic; and reaching and altitude of 830 feet above tidewater level, is an unique experience.



REGATTA DAY, STONEY LAKE.

In the early days this route was used by the Indians, trappers and explorers in their journeyings between Eastern and Western Canada. It was travelled by Champlain during his western trip in 1615, and the great French pioneer has recorded the wonderful impression this beautiful district made on him. At Trenton, canal operations were started by the British Government in 1833. The object was to construct a military highway over this route, and a number of locks and dams were built at various points. Subsequent disturbed conditions throughout the country caused a cessation of activities, and very little was done for over forty years. The work was again taken up, this time by the Dominion Government. The old wooden locks were enlarged and replaced by substantial stone masonry, while concrete and steel are being used in those more recently built.

GORE'S LANDING, RICE LAKE,

Although only about thirty-two miles of actual canal will be needed, the task of building it has been a herculean one. Most of the cuts have been made through solid rock, and a difference of 596 feet in water levels had to be overcome. When completed there will be a depth of not less than eight feet of water on the entire channel.

Between Trenton and Heeley's Falls, sections have been completed but through navigation is not yet possible. Between Heeley's Falls and Washago at the northern end of Lake Couchiching, a distance of about 165 miles, the work is practically complete and navigation is being carried on each summer. From Washago to Georgian Bay the route follows the Severn River and is still under construction.

When completed the waterway will provide a trip over two hundred miles long, and an additional one hundred miles into lateral connecting waters, and will form a connecting link between the Thousand Islands district of the St. Lawrence and the famous Georgian Bay region. The waters of the lake are deep and translucent and are well stocked with black bass, three and four pounds; maskinonge, from ten to thirty pounds, and also salmon trout. The rivulets and small streams provide excellent speckled trout fishing. Motor boat, canoe and camping parties find their beau-ideal of summer outing on these lakes. Indian and white guides and cooks are to be had at all points on the route. Canoes, tents, camp beds, utensils, fishing tackle and other outfit for camping parties will be found at any of the towns. Gasoline, batteries, oil, repair parts, etc., for motor boats, are also kept in stock at these places. The hotel accommodations are first-class.

Between Trenton and Frankford the Trent River is between three hundred and four hundred feet wide, and the banks are quite high. This section has been canalized by locks and dams and there is a rise of one hundred and eighteen feet. A flooded reach extends five and one-half miles to Chisholm's Rapids. A masonry lock, and a canal, half a mile long, cut out of solid rock, are located there. The route then passes through another flooded reach of three and one-half miles to Hoard's Creek. A cut across country of eleven miles to Crow Bay is then made. There is one hundred and sixty-six feet of rise in this section. The route crosses Crow Bay to Heeley's Falls, a distance of two miles. Here a rise of seventy-seven feet will be made by means of a hydraulic lift lock. The navigable part is now reached, and eleven miles up the river, which is about six hundred feet wide on this section, is the village of Hastings. A masonry lock is located here and then the remaining six miles of the river are passed before entering Rice Lake.

This lake is surrounded by beautiful farming country, and after a twelve mile sail the mouth of the Otonabee River is reached. Twenty miles up this beautiful winding stream there is a lock and two swing bridges, then Little Lake, at the city of Peterborough is crossed. A concrete lock and two swing bridges are at the entrance to the stretch of canal which cuts across country to Nassau, a distance of four miles. Just above the bridges, the Peterborough hydraulic lift or elevator lock, the largest in the world, is reached. The lift of sixty-five feet is quickly made, and any boat up to one hundred and forty feet in length and eight feet draught can pass through.

The introduction of this style of lock is a decided innovation in canal construction. Between Lake Ontario and Kirkfield, one hundred and ninety and one-half feet of the rise is overcome by three of these locks. The Peterborough lock is a magnificent example of engineering, and its towers rising to almost the height of Niagara, accentuate the Cyclopean appearance of the structure.

Peterborough, with a population of nearly 20,000, is the largest municipality on the waterway, and is a very interesting and beautiful place. Its celebrated canoes are used in all parts of the world. Between Nassau and Lakefield, a distance of about five miles, are five concrete locks and dams. Lakefield is a busy place and is also noted for its canoes. Lake Katchewanooka is next en route, then the lock at the village of Young's Point, and Clear Lake, a fine open expanse six miles long and over a mile wide.

A PETERBOROUGH HUNTING PARTY.

From Clear Lake the channel passes through a group of islands into beautiful Stony Lake, the brightest gem of Kawartha. This lake is about ten miles long and two wide, and its eight hundred rocky islands are covered with luxuriant verdure. Artistic summer cottages and villas adorn these islands, as well as the numerous tents of the campers.

It would be difficult to find a more suitable place to spend a delightful summer vacation. The bright morning sunshine finds the camper armed with rod and line starting out to try his luck, and it is seldom he returns without a goodly catch of game black bass and one or two maskinonge. The motor boat and canoe trips to the many interesting points on the lake, an invigorating plunge in the clear waters, and the good old picnic "shore dinner," with its crisp bacon nicely browned, fresh fish and French toast, all liberally interspersed with wood ashes, are among the pleasant memories of such a vacation.

At the end of the day comes that glorious northern sunset with its radiant hues mirrored in the calm waters. Soon the islands stand in silhoutte against the long light of the moon, and the darting fire flies gambol along the wooded shores. Then the sweet strains of the waltz come floating over the lake as a merry party of dancers wile away the evening. The camp fires gleam out and the hum of the motor boats as they pick their way through the channel is heard. The evening passes and soon all is still save for the murmur of the distant waterfall and the call of the whip-poor will from a tree top where it has taken up its lonely night vigil.

HOME OF THE SPECKLED TROUT.

From Stony Lake the route passes up the Burleigh channel to Burleigh Falls. This is a popular resort and there is a large waterfall, a fine summer hotel, and cottages. A double lock, a massive masonry structure with a twenty-six foot lift, is located here. It then crosses Lovesick Lake, about two miles long and quite narrow, through Lovesick lock, over Deer Bay, up the Buckhorn channel, through the Buckhorn lock, and over Buckhorn Lake, a beautiful island studded expense to the Indian villate of the Mississauga tribe, where Indian basket and birch bark work is offered for sale.

A side trip may be taken into Chemong Lake through a channel at this point. This lake is about six miles long and two wide and has beautiful farms on its shores. Near the upper end, the village of Bridgenorth is reached, and near it is Chemong Park, a fine summer resort. An auto line connects with Peterborough, which is about six miles distant. From Indian village the route passes through Gannon's Narrows and over Pigeon Lake, a beautiful sheet, with large islands and a number of very fine residences. The charming villae of Bobcaygeon, which is about seventeen miles from Buckhorn lock, is then reached. Another lock is located here, then Sturgeon Lake, about ten miles long and a mile wide is crossed. Sturgeon Point, a large resort located on a finely wooded promontory on the northern shore, is the most interesting place on this lake. A side run may be taken up the Scugog River to Lake Scugog, and the towns of Lindsay and Port Perry visited.

From Sturgeon Lake the route is up the picturesque Fenelon River, whose high rocky shores are very beautiful, to the thriving village of Fenelon Falls. Another double lock with a twenty-four foot lift is located here. Cameron Lake, about three mile long and two wide, with heavily wooded shores is then crossed, and the Rosedale River entered. The Burnt River, a stream navigable for large boats for many miles, affords a delightful side run at this point. It is quite narrow, but of good depth, and the high trees on its banks from an archway over it at several places. Between the Rosedale River and Balsam Lake there is a lock with a three-foot lift. Balsam Lake is about six miles long and eight wide. After crossing the lake an interesting side trip may be taken up the Gull River to the village of Coboconk. From Balsam Lake the route is through five and the half miles of canal, hewn out of limestone rock, to the hydraulic lift lock at Kirkfield. This lock which overcomes an elevation of forty-eight and one half feet is situated at the highest point of the waterway, the apex of the two watersheds tributary respectively, to Lake Ontario and Georgian Bay. It is five hundred and ninety-six feet above Lake Ontario and eight hundred and thirty feet above tide water level, one hundred and twenty-two feet above above Lake Simcoe and two hundred and fifty-eight feet above Georgian Bay. The next section of six and one-half miles is through a flooded reach of Talbot River. A cut across country of two and one half miles to Lake Simcoe is then made. There are five concrete locks in this section. Lake Simcoe, the largest on the system, is about thirty-five miles long and fifteen wide. It his a number of large summer resorts on its shore line of over two hundred miles. The fine town of Barrie, is situated at the head of Kempenfeldt Bay, an inlet ten miles long. North of this lake and connected with it by a strait a mile long is Lake Couchiching, known as the Geneva of Canada. This beautiful expanse is about twelve miles long and five miles wide, contains a number of islands and neat summer cottages and is noted for its scenery. One of Canada's most progressive towns, Orillia, is located on its southern shore. At the northern end is the town of Washago, the terminus of navigation at present.

Two routes were surveyed from Lake Couchiching to Georgian Bay, one across country, and the other through Severn River. The latter route, which is about twenty-five miles long, will be used, and is now under construction. The Severn River is a stream over six hundred feet wide with high rocky sores, rushing rapids and plunging waterfalls. It will form a truly fitting finale to a trip over this magnificent new waterways.

When completed a large tourist traffic will certainly develop. The route presents all the attractions for an outing of a most enjoyable kind. The inland waterway will prove a favorite route for power boats, and the advantages they will enjoy throughout will lead to continual increases in their numbers.

DUSTY AND QUINLAN TO DO THE TWIRLING

A second meeting between the All Stars and T.A.S. has been arranged for Saturday afternoon at Riverside, and the two teams will endeavor to contribute some classy baseball.

The Abstainers had to be content with the small end of the score at the former meeting between the two nines, and are welcoming this opportunity of another chance to reverse matters if possible.

Dusty and Quinlan will be the opposing twirlers and the men behind will be players who will fight all the way.

The admission will be fifteen cents.

BRIEF AND BREEZY

"Doc" Burton, pitching for New Liskeard at Hamilton Monday against a local nine, won a shut out 3—0.

Killien, a southpaw, and the property of the Detroit club, joins the Toronto Maple Leafs at Jersey City to-day. Another yellow fruitlet.

Johnson is due for more notoriety. They have him now as having thrown aside his white wife.

Those in charge of the arrangements for the All Star-T. A. S. game at Riverside Park, Saturday afternoon, have decided decided to place the admission fee at fifteen cents. This amount is sufficient for any local game, when only city teams are playing. The circumstances are altered when an outside club is brought here. The expenses are heavy, even more than the average fan has any idea of, and the home team is justified in charging twenty-five cents.

An endeavor is being made to bring one of the City League teams of Toronto here at an early date.

"Fish" Haney is right at home. He has hiked to the huants of sunfish and mosquitos for the purpose of getting some new guff, for the gathering at the All Star-T.A.S. game Saturday afternoon at Riverside Park. Last evening, so the rumor goes, he captured several undersized minnows.

While the City League magnates have been on the lookout for backstops all summer, a youngster by name Eano, who it is stated has it on all the present city catchers has been lying idle. Eano works behind the bat for the Lock Works ball team.

The T.A.S. baseball club has arranged for a game here on Civic Holiday with a team from Cobourg.

Pittsburg took two games from Philadelphia yesterday, Magee of the the Phillies, in eight times at bat, knocked out a home run, one three bagger, two two baggers and was hit by a pitched ball.

A Vancouver foxterrier proves to be the best in Canada by defeating under Judge Mortimer, of New York, the best judge in America, the winners of the Ottawa, London, Toronto and Montreal dog shows. Ingastentone Rustem, owned by W. M. Coats, of Vancouver, became the undisputed best foxterrier in Canada at Winnipeg last week. Ingatestone Rustem won first limit, first open and first winners, and special for best foxterrier in show, defeating all the Eastern champions.

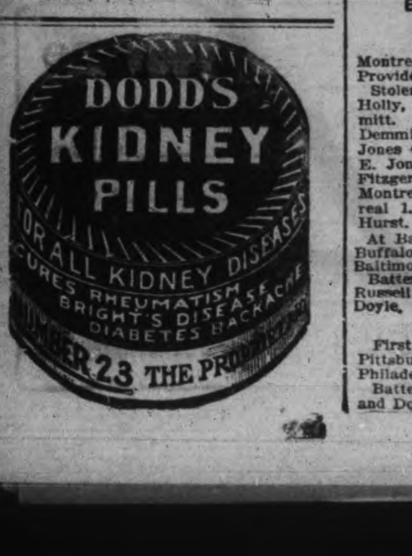
Six men of the Guelph fire brigade absented themselves from duty for a day as a result of a difference with their chief.



SOME CLASS TO THIS OUTFIT

Mr. Herb Kendry has a highly trained trick horse which he will show at the Toronto exhibition and the other fairs of the province this fall.

Mr. Kendry has an attractive outfit in connection with the exhibit, having been supplied with a large tent and painting of the educated equine by Messrs. J. J. Turner and Sons. As a musical accompanument he has a $1,200 band organ.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir,—The people of Peterborough ought to be grateful for any entertainment given them, especially at such a small cost as at the Grand Opera House. But in the present case they ought to thank Mr. Turner for providing such an educative, pleasant interesting programme as he is doing this week. In every way the programme is superior to anything ever given here before.

Yours truly,
WELLWISHER.

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Upon your editorial suggestion I read the article upon the Birmingham Board of Health, and was well repaid for doing so. It defines in a single sentence the duties of a medical health officer by saying that "it is his business to take cognizance of everything which affects prejudicually the health of the people and suggest remedial and preventive measures." The Birmingham Board, unlike our board of do nothings, is composed of experts. Amongst other things, "it is concerned with the collection and destruction of refuse ..... the inspection of house property and insistence on its being maintained in good sanitary condition.......And the abatement of smoke, nuisances." Owing to the city sanitary precautions "the death rate has been reduced in the last 40 years from 25 per 1,000 per annum to 15 1-2. The diminished mortality during the last five years alone as compared with the previous five years represents a saving of about 1650 lives per annum." But I suppose this matter of saving so many lives is but of small moment to our sleeping authorities.

Yours truly
BYSTANDER.

JERMYN

Special to the Revew.

Aug. 3, 1910.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Armstrong, of Toronto, were the guests of Miss Edith Armstrong Saturday and Sunday.

Miss J. Clarry, of Hastings, and Miss Mary Fife, were the guests of Miss Lizzie Fife Sunday.

Miss R. Carter is spending her holidays at Edmonton.

It is said coming events cast their shadows ahead. They may been seen around Jermyn this week.

Nearly all the people of this vicinity visited the wreck on the C.P.R. and no doubt some will find difficulty in disposing of their stock of pickles and chocolates for some time.

Messrs Geo. and Fred Fife visited the wreck Sunday. Mr. Geo. Fife reports that there were some very fine peas scattered around, For further information ask "George."

Church services will be withdrawn at Bethel Sunday morning as the Quarterly meeting services will be held at Keene. S. S. services will be postponed to the evening.

Local fishermen have been having good luck during the past week. Mr, Fred Fife succeeded in landing three lunge, L. Armstrong also secured three, but they both envy Mr. G. Fife's luck, who secured eight bass on Saturday.

Mr. G. W. M. Fife attended Indian River church Sunday evening.

Local slueths are busily engaged trying to get a clue leading to the identification of the parties who were emitting the blood curdling yells that were heard near hear Saturday night.

Farmers report that the recent rains are sprouting the peas that were lying cut. If it continues damp serious damage will result.

The Matrimonial Club, "alias Glee Club," intends to disband. The final meeting will be reported in next week's Review.

Owing to the G.T.R. strike several loads of produce have passed through village en route to C.P.R. station.

The Literary committee of Bethel Epworth League held a meeting at Mr. J. Borland's Thursday night to arrange a programme for a lawn social.

The Bethel Young Men's A. B. C. will hold their quarterly business meeting on Thursday night.

Mr, Stewart Armstrong is erecting a new dwelling on the Fife farm.

Mr, Bob McConkey will run Mr. Armstrong's threshing engine this fall.

Howard Craig and Charles Wood, having served their sentences at Kingston, were deported to the other side of the line on Saturday.

MONTE CARLO'S RULER.

His Subjects Vote Not, Neither Do They Pay Taxes.

In Monaco, as in Russia, the ruler is supreme. It is an absolute hereditary monarchy. Even Russia has its douma, but in the dominions of Prince Albert voting is unknown. Yet the Monegasques cannot raise that historic cry of taxation without representation, for if they are not permitted the one they are not burdened with the other.

Albert I., the reigning prince, has devoted his life to scientific research, so the money which the spendthrifts throw away answers some useful purpose after all. He is one of the foremost authorities on marine zoology, his solutions of the gulf stream problem have been recognized by the Institute of France, and the oceanographic museum which he has founded has no equal. He is sixty-one years old, has been twice married and twice divorced—first to the Lady Mary Douglas-Hamilton, whose story is a romantic and a pathetic one, and twenty years later to the dowager Duchess of Richelieu. He tired of them both. He has one child, the Crown Prince Louis.

Prince Albert divides his time between his yacht, with its remarkable scientific equipment, his Paris residence in the Avenue Trocadero and the pink and white palace perched on a rock above the gaming hall which supports him.—Metropolitan Magazine.

The Opium Couch.

In the library of a Chinese gentleman the opium couch is as inseparable a feature of a gentleman's home as the armchairs and cigars of an American den. Perhaps it must disappear now before the prohibition campaign which is being waged from Peking, or it will remain under the innocent guise of a reclining reading table, as some innocent globe trotters have described it. Opium as used in the ordinary citizen's private house is considered no more a vice than tobacco with Americans. It is the custon; that is all. The host waves you to the couch for a perfunctory whiff just as Americans begin by offering a guest a cigar.

The Size of Antarctica.

It is a somewhat curious fact, if it is a fact, that the last of the terrestrial continents to be explored is the largest mass of raised land in the world. The concentration of attention upon the south pole since Commander Peary landed the other end of our axis makes it highly probable that the antarctic antipode will soon be dangling from some explorer's belt. Incidentally the south polar continent will be opened, if not to the settler, at least to the mapmaker. We already know something of its fringes at a few points, and Lieutenant Shackleton pushed into it south of Mounts Erebus and Terror for several hundred miles, but the greater portion of its surface is still terra incognita.—Collier's.

Aged Equestrian Killed.

Lockhaven, Pa., Aug. 4.—S. R. Peale, former state Senator, and one of the most prominent men in this section of the state, died Tuesday night as a result of injuries received when his horse fell upon him Tuesday. Although eighty years old, it was Mr. Peale's custom to take a daily horseback ride.

Ore Carrier Aground.

Amherstburg, Aug. 4.—The steamer D. G. Kerr, downbound with ore, ran aground on the west bank of the limekiln crossing early yesterday morning. She is leaking badly, and will have to be lightered. The tug Goulder and the lighter Favorite have gone to her assistance.

Appointments to "Rainbow."

London, Aug. 4.—The following appointments have been made to the Rainbow: J. D. Stewart, in command on commission, Aug. 4; Lieuts. A. E. D. Moore, R.H.C., Halifax; R. V. Holt, R. T. Edwards; engineer commander, T. J. Morgan; engineer lieutenant, R. H. M. Bury; artificer engineer, R. W. Hood; staff paymaster, R. A. Jenkins; surgeon, T. A. Smyth, gunners, Mock and Pehan.

Want Reduced Rates.

Chicago, Aug. 4.—The filing of a petition with the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington, asking that body to investigate the tariffs and net revenue of express companies, by commercial organizations throughout the country, was made known yesterday. The petition is signed by 124 associations of commerce and commercial clubs who want a considerable reduction in express rates.

The Reward of Bravery.

London, Aug. 4.—King George, at Marlborough House Tuesday, in the presence of the Home Secretary and other Government officials, decorated 62 miners for conspicuous gallantry in saving, or attempting to save, life in the recent colliery disasters, presenting them with King Edward medals. Nine seamen also received medals for conspicuous gallantry in saving life at sea.

Two Hundred Fishermen Drowned.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 4.—Under the direction of the military authorities, rescue work was yesterday taken up on the River Amell Amoor, near Nicolaiesvk, where 200 fishermen are known to have been drowned when a typhoon wrecked their boats Tuesday. It is feared that the death list will exceed that number.

Explosion Result of Carelessness.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 4.—The Russian admiralty yesterday ordered a rigid investigation into the torpedo boat explosion at Kronstadt Tuesday, in which six sailors were killed and nearly a score injured. It is hinted that the explosion resulted from carelessness on the part of the crew.

A Reign of Terror.

Bonnay, Fla., Aug. 4.—A reign of terror exists in the northwestern section of Holmes County, owing to the determination of the whites, by a wholesale lynching of negroes, to avenge the murder of Bessie Morri-

THE GENUINE ALWAYS SUPERIOR TO THE IMITATION

The experienced buyer never permits the shrewd merchant to convince him that an imitation is superior to the genuine advertised article. In refusing a substitute he protects himself and the manufacturers who have expended enormous sums in giving the public information regarding their products.

Advertised articles have stood the test of public approval on their merits and materials embracing their make-up. The mere fact that they are imitated is competent testimony of their worth.

You are safe in rejecting the article offered as "just as good."

Two New Industries.

St. Catharines, Aug. 4.—The large stone building at Merritton recently purchased from the Canadian Colored Cotton Co. by the Canadian Haircloth Co. has been sold to a syndicate which will establish a rubber factory to employ 300 men. The factory will be outside of the present rubber merger. The haircloth factory will remain in the city, but will buy an adjoining factory and double its present capacity. The Merritton mill cost the rubber company $70,000.

Fell on Prongs of Fork.

Charlottetown, P.E.I., Aug. 4.—Frank Devine, aged 20, while engaged in hay-making at North Wiltshire, fell from the top of a load, landing upon the outspreading prongs of his hayfork, which entered below the right armpit, penetrating the lungs to a depth of seven inches.

Becalmed All Night.

Toronto, Aug. 4.—Becalmed in a sailboat, Eugene Rockwood of Long Branch, and Miss Whitten, a nurse at Mimico Asylum, spent the night on the lake. A gasoline launch sent out in search located them off Port Credit about ten o'clock yesterday morning.

FOOLISH WOMAN'S LOVE LETTER

New York, August 3.—The suit of Russell Griswood, 21, for $50,000 damages for breach of promise against Miss Helen Woodruff Smith, of Stamford, Conn., heiress to several millions, was characterized as "blackmail" to-day by the young lady. Miss Smith freely discussed the suit as she was preparing to leave for a cruise on the yacht Viking.

"Griswold published my letters to him, and they speak for themselves," she said. "They are letters from a patroness to a protege kid—a mere boy.

"I was only joshing in my letters and if I mentioned love it was only puppy love. I had no thought of marrying him, and did not promise to marry him.

"I would not marry the finest man in the world, and this nasty little turncoat is hardly a man, is he?"

Then followed several references to young Griswold, in which the expressions "creature," "presumptuous little cad," "bounder" and "beggar" were features.

"I educated and practically raised Griswold," continued Miss Smith. "He is a foolish boy and has been ill-advised."

Griswold to-day published more letters attributed to the girl. One of the extracts reads—

"Be sure and destroy the evidence of my whereabouts and do not say I am here or anywhere. It were best to say, like Evelyn Thaw, that you 'don't know.'

"I think I'll take a 'golden gate' or some other high-priced drink. Maybe it will open the way to the 'sweet presence of a god diffused,' but thoughts affectionate so often occasion that presence that there will be nothing new about it except the drink. Meiner Siegfried."

Another portion of the letter reads;

"Ye gods, kid, just finished the job. It might have been the other way, but, thanks to your help, it did not finish me. 'Tis hard to kiss you, sweetheart, when the last kiss means good-bye?"

Later this occurs;

"With this goes two handkerchiefs. Not for tears, but to wave when we're in sight; not to flirt with, but to repose in Ruzzie's pocket, to be used after soda and the like."

Griswold, when told that Miss Smith had caustically criticised him, exclaimed;

"I expected that she would not like the thing to become public. Of course she is mad. But how about my feelings? She had no thought of them when she flatly refused to marry me after keeping me dangling after and adoring her ever since boyhood. She made me suffer, now let her suffer for it."

Before sailing Miss Smith conferred with her attorneys, who announced this afternoon that they would seek legally to enjoin Griswold from publishing the letters.

"I'll stop this little scamp's dirty work legally," said Miss Smith after the conference. "There must be some protection for me against him or his advisors who are publishing the letters."

Heidelberg, Germany, is going to erect a monument to Mark Twain, who began his story, "A Tramp Abroad," there.

COLLIE DOG SEVERELY BIT LITTLE FOUR YEAR OLD GIRL

Was Leading Dog on Leash and It Became Infuriated By Boys Who Teased It—Siezed Child on Arm and Inflicted Painful Wound—Medical Aid Was Required

The little four-year-old daughter of Mr. Duffy, who resides on McDonnel street, just behind the old Collegiate Institute, was very severely bitten by a collie dog this morning about ten o'clock.

As far as can be learned the injury to the little girl was caused by some small boys teasing the dog, which was being led by the child, who had hold of the animal by the collar.

The dog tried to get away from the little girl and failing to do so it turned and buried its teeth in her right arm, hanging on to it very tenaciously, and several blows from a stick were required before it released the arm.

A gash about one inch and a half long and half an inch deep was inflicted on the tender flesh of the child.

She was taken into the house of Mrs. Lockhart, at Water and McDonnel streets, and was attended to by Dr. Halliday. The doctor stated it was one of the worst looking bites he had ever witnessed.

It is understood that the dog will be shot immediately.

When seen to-day the little girl was able to be around the house and was bearing up well under the pain of the wound. She did not utter the slightest cry during the painful operation of having the wound cauterized.

THE CAMPERS ALARMED BY LIGHTNING

Mr. Wm. Merrell and family, who are encamped at Crawford's Grove, were much alarmed last evening during the storm.

A large tree just behind their tent was struck by lightning and was split into two sections. In falling to the ground it narrowly escaped striking the tent in which the party were.

In conversation with other campers to-day the Review learned that no damage or discomfort was experienced by them as a result of the storm.

Gave Amazing Answers

Humanity is sceptical by nature. But the doubting ones who attended the performances of Ita, if not actually convinced are at least mystified.

Last night Ita excelled herself in answering questions, naming lost articles and describing absent places and persons.

And still there are those who inquire, "how is it done?"

Ask Ita.

IF YOU WANT TO FIGHT IT OUT

From the age of 45 years the eyes have undergone a natural change (which no eye escapes), so that they are either out of focus for distance or near vision, especially at night. You cannot see distinctly with the paper a foot from the eyes and you need strong light. Your real need is suitable glasses. If you want to fight this difficulty out with nature you may do so, millions have done it before you and have been worsted in the fight. We are relieving the eyes of such cases every day. Perhaps you will be wise by taking the matter in time.

DROWNING FATALITIES

Three Toronto Residents Perish—Visitor Dies at Picton.

Toronto, Aug. 5.—Three Torontonians perished yesterday in the water. Merton Kent, of the Argonaut, R. C., son of the late H. A. E. Kent, was drowned from a launch under unusual circumstances while on his way to the regatta at St. Catharines. Harry McBratney, aged 20, was upset with a companion while sailing off Orchard Beach, Lake Simcoe. Fred Swift, a ship's cook, fell into the bay while intoxicated.

The drowning of "Mert" Kent came as a great surprise to his many friends in athletic and social circles. He was thrown into the water when an accident to the tow line, by which his disabled launch was being towed by the steamer "Garden City," caused the small craft to lurch suddenly.

Young McBratney, who was twenty years of age, and employed as a furniture polisher by the John Kay Co., left on Saturday last for Orchard Beach, accompanied by Ernest Pretty of 174 Euclid avenue. Yesterday morning the two lads went out for a sail, were struck by a squall and their boat overturned. It is reported that young McBratney's heart was not very strong, and it is thought that he went down immediately. Pretty was rescued by the two Strachan brothers, who put out immediately in a rowboat.

Fatality at Picton.

Picton, Aug. 5.—E. J. Paradis, general manager of the Syracuse Gas Engine Co., of Syracuse, N.Y., was drowned.

Paradis, with his wife and Captain Wessels, and H. W. Sheriff, manager of the Royal Hotel, were out in Sheriff's motor boat. There was a heavy sea running. Paradis stood up in the boat, and, losing his balance, fell overboard.

VIOLATION OF THE ALIEN ACT

Thirteen Strike-Breakers In Jail at Sarnia.

Some Being Taken Back.

Brockville, Aug. 5.—The Grand Trunk trainmen and conductors who went on strike are being gradually taken back into the service. Yesterday union crews were called for the day freights east and west out of Brockville and six union crews were in charge of as many trains arriving from Montreal. The men are not, however, being taken back as quickly as they expected, and much uneasiness prevails in the ranks of the brotherhood. No passenger conductors nor brakemen have yet been called for duty. Several yardmen are back in their old places.

Troops Called Off.

Bridgeburg, Aug. 5.—The troops that have been here for several days, guarding Grand Trunk property during the strike, left by special train yesterday at seven a.m. for Niagara Falls, Toronto and London.

None Re-employed at Ottawa.

Ottawa, Aug. 5.—Not one of the striking trainmen on the Ottawa division of the Grand Trunk has as yet been re-employed, nor has official word been received of the termination of the strike.

Strike-Breakers Dismissed.

London, Ont., Aug. 5.—A sensational episode was enacted Wednesday night when the Pacific Express from Suspension Bridge drew up to the platform and Conductor Hughson and Brakemen Willisley and Turleston, all American strike-breakers, were dismissed by Supt. Bowker, charged with being intoxicated.

Thirteen Strike-Breakers Arrested.

Sarnia, Aug. 5.—Traveling Immigration Inspector Herbert has caused the arrest of thirteen Grand Trunk strike-breakers at Sarnia, and is now endeavoring to secure the arrest of one other of the party of fourteen men who came in from the States. The party had about $20 each in cash, and on landing in Sarnia Wednesday, after passing the immigration inspection, this money was taken over by the G.T.R. agent at Sarnia. Herbert has signed declarations to this effect. On a charge that they were entering Canada under false pretences, thirteen of the men are now in jail in Sarnia.

FREIGHT THE CHIEF QUESTION

Cost of Carrying Goods Is the Paramount Issue, Says Graham.

Moose Jaw, Sask., Aug. 5.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier and party arrived here yesterday afternoon from Weyburn after making short stops at Yellow Grass and Lang. The Premier had his customary conference with the grain-growers.

At a luncheon given by the Canadian Club in the evening to the members of the Premier's party, Hon. Mr Graham spoke on the subject of transportation charges.

"We have heard a great deal in the press about reduced passenger rates—about the two-cent passenger rate. In the matter of rates that is not the paramount question. Few people in comparison to the number of the population travel. More are traveling now than in the earlier days of the country because there are more people now in the country."

Explosion Kills Two.

Boston, Aug. 5.—Two persons were killed and several injured by the explosion of a steam pipe on board the fishing excursion steamer Satellite as she was proceeding down the harbor yesterday. The dead are firemen. There was no panic among the passengers.

RUPTURE IS POSSIBLE; MAY BE RED SUNDAY

Vatican May Break Off Relations With Spain.

Papal Nuncio to the Spanish Court Is Preparing to Leave In Case Premier Canalejas Goes Any Further In His Anti-Catholic Policy—Bloodshed Is Feared at San Sebastian When Clericals Celebrate Sunday.

Rome, Aug. 5.—Monseignor Vico, the papal nuncio to the Spanish court, was given instructions from the Vatican to be ready to leave Madrid at a moment's notice, in case of an unfavorable issue to the negotiations.

This preparation for a complete rupture of diplomatic relations between Spain and the Vatican would indicate that little is hoped from the answer which Cardinal Merry del Val is now drafting. Although the Vatican is earnestly trying its best to avoid a complete break with Spain, Cardinal Merry del Val fears that Senor Canalejas, the Spanish Premier, will be forced, in order to satisfy his extremist supporters, to still further accentuate his anti-Catholic policy, and the cardinal is preparing for the worst.

The Giornale D'Italia publishes an interview with Cardinal Vicenzo Vannutelli, who describes Premier Canalejas as "a terrible man," adding that it is impossible that King Alfonso approves his anti-clerical policy.

Candinal Vannutelli goes on to point out that the King is a fervent Catholic by sentiment and tradition but that he is too young to grapple with the situation and he has been seriously embarrassed.

With reference to the report that the King of Portugal is to visit the King of Italy in 1911, thus disregarding the prohibition of the Vatican, Cardinal Vannutelli considers this most unlikely, as Portugal has just appointed a representative to the Holy See.

May Be a Red Sunday.

Madrid, Aug. 5.—A renewed and formal prohibition of the proposed manifestation of the clerical forces at San Sebastian, the summer capital, next Sunday, was issued yesterday by the Minister of the Interior. The organizers of the demonstration nevertheless persist in their plans and as the Republican leaders are arranging an anti-clerical demonstration at San Sebastian on the same day, great apprehension prevails.

The civil authorities are considering legal prosecutions against the organizers of the proposed Catholic manifestations and troops are in readiness to enter the summer capital at any time.

PUGSLEY AT MILITARY COLLEGE

Kingston, Aug. 5.—Hon. Dr. Pugsley was here yesterday and promised new dormitories, a drill hall and a cement wharf at the Royal Military College, which he saw yesterday for the first time. Dr. Pugsley was delighted with Kingston. He said it had a magnificent location. He went on to Toronto on the Government steamer Speedy.

Capt. Wolfe, Chatham, England, will succeed Capt. Brown, and Capt. Sedgewick, Hillfield, Eng., takes Maj. de Bury's place at the Military College in September.

Paul Waggoner and Joseph Clappon, Toronto salesmen, are held here pending enquiry into their Toronto movements. On a vagrancy charge, the men were remanded to jail for a week. News came that they had issued checks in Toronto when they had no funds in the bank.

CONDEMNS MONTREAL'S MORALITY

Montreal, Aug. 5.—That Montreal is one of the worst places on the American continent, that the social evil has increased here at an alarming rate during the past few months, and that Inspector O'Keefe and his special morality squad are grossly inefficient, is the statement made by J. H. Roberts, secretary of the Dominion Alliance.

Dr. Hawk of Melfort, Saske., has been arrested, charged with illegal practice in the case of Mary Scott, who died in convulsions at the hospital.

At St. John, N.B., John Kearns, confined to bed with tuberculosis, took advantage of a moment when his wife, who was sitting up with him, had fallen to sleep, and cut his throat with a razor.

160,000 CAME TO CANADA

Ottawa, Aug. 5.—A hundred and sixty thousand immigrants came to Canada in the six months of the calendar year ended June 30. The final figures are not yet ready at the Department, but the above is the approximate total. Of this number the proportion is about 90,000 Americans and 70,000 British and continental.

Italy's Formal Demand.

Washington, D.C., Aug. 5.—What is assumed to be Italy's formal demand for the extradition of Porter Charlton, the young American in the Hudson County (N.J.) jail, charged with having killed his wife, Mary Scott Charlton, at Lake Como, Italy, reached the State Department yesterday.

BANK MEN IN COURT; LOOKING INTO EVIDENCE

Magistrate's Decision in Lindsay Conspiracy Case Postponed.

A. B. MGill, J. J. Fleury and J. L. Coulter of Lindsay Branch of the Home Bank Face Charge of Attempting to Impair Reputation of Rival Concern — They Acted In Good Faith, Says Their Counsel.

Lindsay, Aug. 5.—"It is a serious matter. I want to look into the evidence carefully," said Magistrate Alex. Jackson yesterday afternoon in deferring until Wednesday morning next his decision in regard to the accusations brought by the Farmers' Bank of Canada against three former employes.

The formal charge reads:

"That A. B. McGill, J. J. Fleury and J. L. Coulter, of the Town of Lindsay, in the County of Victoria, and at other places in the Province of Ontario, in the year 1910, prior to the laying of this information, did unlawfully and wickedly conspire, confederate and agree with one another and each with the other by deceit and falsehood and other fraudulent means to defraud the Farmers' Bank of Canada, and to injuriously affect the credit and standing of the Farmers' Bank."

Magistrate Jackson declined to try the case, but held merely a preliminary investigation. Crown Attorney Devlin was assisted by H. H. Dewart, K.C., of Toronto, former county crown attorney there, and who is acting as counsel for the Farmers' Bank. Thos. Stewart, counsel for the accused, objected, but was told that, as it was only an enquiry, it was permissible. For the same reason the defence submitted no evidence. The court was crowded.

The allegations that McGill, former local manager of the Farmers' Bank; Fleury, his accountant, and Coulter, former manager at Nestleton, conspired to resign from the Farmers' Bank and spread certain information calculated to cause depositors to withdraw, and to send their custom to the Home Bank, into the service of which the defendents entered, the Home having but recently opened up a local office. It is claimed that the defendants approached depositors, some of them late at night, and intimated that the bank and its management was not especially "safe." As a result, some $50,000 was withdrawn, some of which has been returned, but most of which has gone to the Home Bank, of which McGill is now manager.

Mr. Dewart first examined J. G. Fitzgibbon, chief inspector of the Farmers' Bank, as to the soundness of the bank's stock. Witness said he had never heard of it selling below 25. Evidence was later submitted that defendants had told certain persons it had been down to 11 and 10. The inspector said that not 100 shares had changed hands in the past four months. The stock paid dividends at 4 per cent. per annum, the last payment being on July 4. An action for $150,000 had been brought against the Farmers' Bank at Syracuse, N.Y., but it had been set side, thrown out by the grand jury, no injunction or judgment being given against the bank.

During the day several men told of having been advised to withdraw their deposits. Gordon Dickson of Belleville, who succeeded McGill, said that on June 29, when he arrived at Lindsay, McGill had said there'd been a run, and that he hadn't said a word against the bank. Dickson told of McGill coming into the Janetville office with a check and passbook belonging to a depositor, James Baxter, and demanding the money. He also said that Fleury, then in the Home Bank, brought in eight or twelve checks, signed by customers of the Farmers' Bank. Roy Evans, now manager of the Farmers' Bank at Nestleton, said that Fleury, after going to the Home Bank, brought fifteen or twenty checks to the Lindsay office on accounts in the Farmers' Bank, amounting to seventeen thousand dollars. It was then Evans had informed the head office, although McGill had tried to prevent him.

The defence as outlined was that McGill had persuaded his friends to deposit their savings in the Farmers' Bank, and that, hearing certain rumors he had become alarmed and had simply given his friends a warning. Coulter had also persuaded some of his friends to deposit in the bank so he helped spread the alarm. They felt that having got the men to deposit with them that they would be blamed if anything happened. McGill had heard that the stock was away down around $11 per share. The par value is $100.

He also heard about an injunction that had been filed in Syracuse, N.Y., against the bank for $150,000. Added to information that alleged that other branches were not doing well, McGill thought the institution was in dangerous shape.

McGill had decided that the depositors would blame him rightly if, having heard those things, he did not put them in a position to protect themselves.

"McGill, in good conscience, resolved that, having persuaded his friends to put money in the bank, and feeling doubtful as to the safety of the money, it was his duty to put the men out of that position," said Thomas Stewart, counsel for the defendants. "They put their money there through confidence in him, not through confidence in the Farmers' Bank."

TRIED TO BRIBE GORE; HOW "YANKEES" DO IT

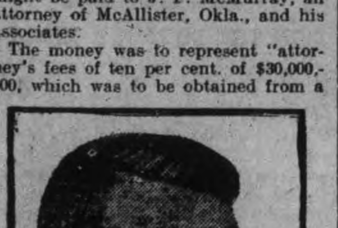
Blind U. S. Senator Makes Charges Against Republicans.

Says Vice-President Sherman Is the Man Higher Up In a Flagrant Attempt to Secure Lands Belonging to Oklahoma Indian Tribes—Attorney Wanted a Fee of Three Millions For Putting Through Deal.

Munskogee, Okla, Aug. 5.—What happened in the private office of United States Senator Thomas P. Gore of Oklahoma, at Washington at noon last May 6th, formed the basis of sensational charges, involving the names of Vice-President Sherman, Senator Charles Curtis of Kansas, Congressman B. S. McGuire of Oklahoma and others, in a hearing before a special Congressional investigating committee here yesterday.

During the thirty or forty minutes of a conference held in that office, Senator Gore testified that he was approached by Jacob L. Hamon, former chairman of the Oklahoma territorial Republican committee and also former chairman of the Oklahoma State Republican committee, and that he was offered a bribe of $25,000 or $50,000 to remove certain legislation pending in Congress, so that $3,000,000 might be paid to J. F. McMurray, an attorney of McAllister, Okla., and his associates.

The money was to represent "attorney's fees of ten per cent. of $30,000,000, which was to be obtained from a



THOMAS P. GORE.

New York syndicate for 450,000 acres of coal and asphalt lands now owned by the Choctau and Chickasaw Indians in this state.

Vice-President Sherman was mentioned by Mr. Hamon, Senator Gore testified, as being interested in the land deal to the extent of favoring the approval by Congress of what was known as the McMurray contracts with the Indians.

"When I scoffed at the offer of a bribe, even if it was raised to $50,000, as Hamon suggested it might be," testified Senator Gore, "my visitor (Hamon) at my office in Washington went on to say other members of Congress were interested in the contracts. He said Senator Curtis was interested and Congressman McGuire of Oklahoma was interested, and then he mentioned the name of a man higher up in the Government. I was appalled when I learned that name."

"What was the name of that man higher up?" asked Chairman Burke.

"Well," replied the blind Senator, "I don't like to say. Indeed, I could not repeat it without a great deal of reluctance."

"Now, Senator Gore," explained Mr. Burke, "this committee has come here to get all the facts, and we want you to tell all you know."

"Well, as that is the case," responded Mr. Gore, "I will tell all I know. The man mentioned by Hamon as being higher up and interested in the McMurray contracts was Vice-President Sherman."

No further questions were asked concerning the mention of Vice-President Sherman.

What happened in another private room in Washington, where also, it is alleged Hamon made more overtures relative to the land deal, was told by Congressman C. E. Creager, of the third Oklahoma district. Congressman Creager supplemented the testimony of Senator Gore.

He said that on June 16 last, he was invited by Hamon to meet him in a private room at the Occidental Hotel in Washington. Having gone there, Mr. Creager testified, he was informed he could have a substantial "interest" in the land deal, if he could withdraw his opposition to the approval of the McMurray contracts by Congress.

TURTLE HATCHED IN HIS STOMACH

Pittsburg, Aug. 5.—William Douglass, of the north side, is dead as the result of a turtle's egg hatching in his stomach. A few weeks ago Douglass partook of some turtle soup. Four days after taking the soup he became ill and numerous physicians were unable to diagnose his disease. An autopsy was performed and a partially formed turtle, almost as large as a hen's egg, was found in his stomach.

THE PENMAN GAMES

The announcement of the Penman athletic games is found in another column. They are held under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. This later organization formerly starting as a purely religious body, in a very insignificent way, has grown world-wide. "A Sound mind in a Sound Body," is or should be one of its slogans. But regardless of slogans within its walls the Y.M.C.A. has within its membership any number of live members who know their business in the field, who can run as well as pray, who can hurdle as well as testify. These are the kind of men that will be here on Labor Day, September the 8th, and we will be glad to see them.

GUELPH

Guelph's rate is 17 mills. In Peterborough we pay 22 mills. But think of the privilege of living in Peterborough. Guelph's rate last year was 14 mills, but this season, and for the past few years they have been embarked on a number of permanent enterprises, which at first cost some money. But they'll get it back, Guelph is a city that believes if there are any good things, Guelph is to get it. It believes in municipal ownership. It owns its street railway. George Sleeman, a brewer, went broke in building and running it. Guelph gets about $6,000 profit yearly from its street railway. It owns a park and a toboggan slide. In the summer when the young man's fancy lightly turns to love, he takes his girl to the park. In the winter when Boreas is getting busy he takes her for a skate on the city rink or a scooot on the toboggan. Guelph has a band. So has Peterborough. Guelph holds its concert in the city park. The people travel on the street cars to get there. Guelph owns its waterworks, its electric light, its gas plant. It pays money to see they are efficiently conducted. It gets a good profit from each. Guelph is a shareholder in the Guelph Junction Railway. William Bell, James Goldie, Charles Raymond, George Sleeman and a few others put in a few thousand dollars to get the thing started. They got the money back with interest. Guelph gets thousands yearly from this branch of the C.P.R., which runs as far as Goderich. Now Peterborough is a fine city. IT BELIEVES IN MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP—THAT IS OF THE GARBAGE PILE.

THE BAR

Tha bar, now where can a man go to spend his evenings, to church? Yes, he might go on Wednesday night, but square and fair, what attraction is there for the sinner in the prayer meeting? None at all. Then where can the sinner, the respectable sinner, the gentleman sinner, the sinner in a strange land, spend an hour or two of a night. In the park? yes, in the park, but what will he do in the park, if he hasn't got a girl. The bar is the only place known in Peterborough where the poor man can be treated corteously—if he has the price. It isn't large 10c. will take him in and a friend also. Here they can talk and talk and talk. The 10c. gives them the attention of a waiter, a no less respectable attention than would be shown a millionaire. When they want to spit they can spit, when they want to "light up" they can light up. There is a feeling of friendship and at homeship in a bar room without producing the pedigree or family details. The cost is 10c. Some declare the bar is a nuisance and a terror. Perhaps it may be—but—it is the poor man's club and here the poor man meets nightly and here he will meet until a better and more convenient place is offered him in which he can forget his boarding house, his scolding wife, or the other evils of the age.

EVEN IN ST. CATHARINES

A garbage collection system is a sanitary necessity, and we cannot afford to take any retrogressive steps back to a voluntary system, which is really no system at all.—The Standard.

LOOSE AND BAGGY

Chicago, Aug. 3.—Well-tailored men of the coming fall will be narrow of shoulder and broad of shest, and the present type of wide shoulder but anemic "clothing store athlete" will have vanished from the realm of the sight.

Exhibits of the fashion show, which was opened formally to-day presaged the passing of the artificial wide shoulder, and bore evidence that superfluous cloth in future will be lavished on the chest.

The overcoat of the "man who knows" will be loose and baggy. The latest thing in keep-warm clothing is called a "greatcoat." Any size will fit anyone fairly well, but is guaranteed not to fit any individual perfectly. The coat coat will bear the ulster collar of last winter, only more so.

Thus we are made. We will be "narrow of shoulder and broad of chest" in the fall. That's womenly. In the winter we will be "loose and baggy." That's bummy. Men we have no laugh on the women. Can we not assert ourselves.

Why should we fall for these creations. We have joked about the women's big hats and their dresses that button up the back — but loose and baggy—"narrow of shoulder and broad of chest," let us be silent for evermore. "Loose and baggy"—we are thus made tramps.

LITTLE ITA

This paper is not a free advertising medium. It is a newspaper, "adds" so much per line, but Ita seems worthy of a little comment free of charge. We are so much intent on that next dollar, or that business chance that we forget. We forget that there are occult forces at work. Of course not every one has occult powers. Ita seems to have.

A SANITARY CITY

The endeavor being made to improve the health conditions of the city is one that is strictly in season and to be highly commended. Guelph has experienced a wonderful transition in this regard within the past few years, and there are few cities in Canada its size which can boast of better sanitary conditions since the sewerage system now in use was planned.

It will not do to stop here, however. There is still much to do, and the extension of the system to those who do not use it, or cannot do so because of the mains not being laid, is as important as the ways and means are difficult to solve. The outdoor closets and refuse in the back yards are still Guelph's drawback, even if the dangers arising from this condition of affairs are not as serious as in years past.

The extension of the garbage collection scheme to every quarter of the city is highly advisable, and if this were done it is just possible that the better method would be to defray the cost thereof out of the general tax rate. By so doing there would be less evasion and a more thorough clean up of the whole city. —Guelph Herald.

There is a system of garbage collection now in Guelph. It is so satisfactory that the Herald wants to have it adopted in the outskirts. But then great bodies like the Peterborough Board of Health and Council move slowly. Witness the elephant for instance.

IN THE SQUARED CIRCLE —"NIT"

The latest phase of the Printing Bureau scandal is the quarrel between Mr. O. H. Parmelee, the recently appointed Liberal Kings' Printer, and Mr. Charles Murphy, the recently appointed Secretary of tSate. Mr. Murphy has elbowed Mr. Parmelee aside from the investigation of his own department, and has inflicted upon him humiliations such as seldom have been heaped upon a public official in a position of authority and responsibility.

Mr. Parmelee was a Liberal M.P. for 12 years, from 1896 to 1900. He represented Shefford, and was one of Mr. Sidney Fisher's band of retainers from the Eastern Townships. He did not run in 1908 and in 1909 was made King's Printer. He is a newspaper publisher of long experience. He became editor of the Waterlood Advertiser when 20 years of age, and with the exception of three years spent in a Montreal newspaper office he managed the Advertiser until 1908. In all he had some thirty years of experience. In particular he did a great deal of job printing, and his office had a remarkably good name for some branches of this. For example, lawyers in places as far distant as Ottawa made use of legal stationery printed by Mr. Parmelee, in Waterloo, Quebec. He thus had technical qualifications for his post, and it was the subject of remark in 1909 and early in 1910 that since Mr. Parmelee had taken charge the Printing Bureau, had got the blue books out much more promptly than before, thereby making an old complaint against it.

Now, is a Minister discovers that something has gone wrong in his eDpartment his natural move is to summon the Deputy Minister of that Department to help him investigate. Yet this is precisely what Mr. Murphy did not do when he was made aware that grafting was going on in the Printing Bureau. He ignored Mr. Parmelee, and called in one of his other deputies, Mr. Mulvey. It is as if Mr. Oliver called in Mr. Pedley, the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, over the head of Mr. Cory to investigate the Interior; or as if Mr. Lemieux while Minister of Labor, had pushed Dr. Coulter to one side and had Mr. Mackenzie King, as Deputy Minister of Labor, look into the management of the Post Office. Mr. Murphy associated Mr. Mulvey with him throughout; left Mr. Parmelee out of everything; took Mr. Mulvey down to New York with him, and, it is understood, did not even notify Mr. Parmelee that such a move was in contemplation.

Moreover, Mr. Murphy has evinced the strongest hostility to Mr. Parmelee. In conversation he censures him on the ground that he has shown great slackness. It is understood that he waited upon the Premier with a request that Mr. Parmelee be dismissed. This Sir Wilfrid Laurier declined to accede to, and it seems that thereupon Mr. Murphy cabled to Mr. Fisher, then in Europe, that he had had better come home and look after his protege.

Lucky Judas

Harper's Weekly.

When the Passion Play at Ober-Ammergau was in progress ten years ago an American visitor spent much of his spare time looking up the actors in their homes and chatting with them about the play. One complaint he met almost everywhere was the tremendous fatigue the performers suffered at the close of the eight-hour performance. Coming to the home of Hans Zwink, the Judas of the play, he found the painter-actor in quite a cheerful mood.

"Does the performance fatigue you so much, too?" the tourist enquired.

Ere Herr Zwink could reply his little ten-year-old son chirped up:

"Pa, he don't get tired. He hangs himself at three o'clock and comes home two hours before the others.

Charles M. Hays

Mr. Charles Melville Hays was born in Rock Island, Ills., on May 16, 1856, and entered railway service in 1873, as a clerk in the passenger department of the Atlantic and Pacific Railway at St. Louis. Four years later he became secretary to the general manager of the Missouri Pacific, and seven years afterwards he took a similar position with the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific, and rose in two years to the position of assistant general manager of the road. In 1887 he was appointed general manager of the Wabash Western, and later of the Consolidated Wabash System. From January 1, 1896, to January 1, 1896, to January 1, 1901, he was general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway System. He left the Grand Trunk to become president of the Southern Pacific, but before the year ended he gave up the position and returned to the Grand Trunk as 2nd vice-president and general manager. Since then he has become president of the G.T.R., of the Grand Trunk Pacific, Central Vermont, Grand Haven and Milwaukee, St. Clair Tunnel Company, and other connections of the G.T.R.

Since he returned to the G.T.R. he has changed it from a fourth-rate, single-track line, to a first-class double-track railway.

Mr. Hays is a big, broad-shouldered man of rather reserved demeanor.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

Hillard felt of his collar and drew down his cuffs. "Probably some joke," he ventured tentatively.

"If it isn't the man who would stoop to such tommyrot and tack the name of his club to it must be an ass."

"No doubt about that. Odd that this is the first time I have heard about it." But silently Hillard was swearing at his folly.

"I may depend upon you tonight, then?" said Merrihew.

"I shall be pleased to meet Miss Killigrew," which was a white one. Hillard would have paid court to a laundress rather than offended Merrihew.

And promptly at 11 he went up to the card room and dragged Merrihew away. Merrihew gave up his chair reluctantly. He was winning. The amateur gambler never wants to stop.

On the way to the Killigrew apartment Merrihew's moods varied. At one moment he was on the heights, at the next in the depths. He simply could not live without Kitty. Perhaps if this trip abroad turned out badly she might change her mind. Seven thousand could be made to muster. Twice Hillard came very near making his friend a confidant of his own affair, but he realized that, while Merrihew was to be trusted in all things, it was not yet time.

He found a pleasing and diverting company. There was Mere Killigrew, a quaint little old lady who deplored her daughter's occupation, but admitted that without her success heaven only knew how they would have got along. There was the genial Thomas O'Mally, a low comedian of genuine ability, whom Hillard knew casually; Smith, a light comedian, and Worth, a moderately successful baritone, to whom Hillard took one of those instant and unaccountable dislikes. These three and Kitty were going abroad.

Kitty fancied Hillard from the start, and he on his side found her well educated, witty and unaffected. She was even prettier than her photograph. Merrihew's face beamed upon them both in a kind of benediction. He had known all along that once Jack saw Kitty he would become a good ally in fighting down her objections.

"Think of singing in Italy!" cried Kitty. "Isn't it just wonderful?"

"And has Merrihew told you to get a return ticket before you sail?" with half a jest.

"Don't you think it will be successful?" a shade of disappointment.

"There will be thousands of lonesome Americans over there. Out of patriotism, if for nothing else, they ought to come to see us."

"They certainly ought to. But I'm an old kill-joy."

"No, no; go on and tell me all your doubts. You have been over there so many times."

"Well, supposing your tourists are tired after having walked all day through the churches and galleries, they may want to go to bed early. But you never can tell till you try. You may become the rage on the continent. Yet you go into the enemy's country. It isn't the same as going to London, among tolerant cousins. In

She was prettier than her photograph.

Italy and in Germany there is always so much red tape—blundering, confusing red tape, custom duties, excessive charges. But your manager must know what he is doing."

"He has everything in black and white, I believe. But your advice is sensible."

"Do you know anything about Italy or Germany?"

"Only what I learned in my geographies," laughing—"Rome, Florence, Genoa, Venice, Nice, Milan, Strassburg, Cologne and on to Berlin. It is like a fairy story come true."

"Who is your prima donna?" he asked.

"Ah!" Kitty's face became eager with excitement. "Now you have put your finger on the mystery that is bothering us all. Not one of us has seen her or knows her name. She has not rehearsed with us and will not till we reach Naples, where we rest a week. When we speak of her the manager smiles and says nothing, and as none of us has seen the backer Mr. Worth thinks that she herself is the prima donna and backer in one. We think that she is some rich young woman who wishes to exploit her voice. There's a lot of them in the world. I wish I knew her. Little has been said about the venture in the papers, and I'm glad. We may prove a perfect fizzle, and the less said the better. As we can't walk back, I must learn to swim. Lunch is ready, every one!"

The mummers and the outsiders flocked into the small dining room. There was plenty to eat; beer, soda, whisky and two magnums of champagne, Merrihew's contribution to the feast. Hillard listened with increasing amusement to the shop talk. It was after 1 when they returned to the sitting room, where the piano stood. The wine was now opened, and toasts were drunk. O'Mally told inimitable stories. There was something exceedingly droll in that expressive Irish face of his.

Worth did not drink, but Hillard did not like his handsome face any the more for this virtue. He sang remarkably well, however, and with a willingness Hillard had not believed he possessed. He wondered vaguely why he disliked the man. Otherwise Hillard enjoyed himself vastly.

"Mr. Merrihew has been telling me all about you," said Kitty.

"You mean, of course, my good qualities," replied Hillard.

"To hear him talk one would think that you possessed nothing else. But I am sure that you have glaring faults such as a man might pass over and a woman go round."

"I believed that Merrihew had a serious fault till tonight," he said.

She looked at him quickly and colored.

"Has the foolish boy been telling you that I refused to marry him? I like him very much," she added gravely, "but I shall never marry any man till I have ceased to love the stage. I am not a whit less extravagant than he is. How could the two of us live on an income which he himself admits that he cannot live within? A month after I am gone he will forget all about me."

"Merrihew is the most loyal man I know," Hillard declared.

"Of course he is loyal! And he is always in earnest—for the moment."

And then they both laughed.

It was outrageously late, nearly 4, when the revelers took leave. Merrihew was happy with that evanescent happiness which goes hand in glove with late suppers and magnums.

"Isn't she a little wonder, Jack?"

"Yes, she is, Dan. It might be a good thing for you to marry a sensible little woman like that. But she won't have you."

"No, she won't." Merrihew reached for his watch. "Four a. m."

"Say, what do you think of that man Worth?"

"Very good voice, but he's too handsome."

"Oh, go on! You're as fine a looking chap as there is in New York. But this man Worth has the looks of a lady killer. He's been eying Kitty, but it doesn't go. Hang it, I can't see why she won't marry me now."

"You must have patience."

"Or more money. Can't O'Mally tell a good story, though?"

"Yes, but I should hate to turn him loose in my wine cellars. I imagine he will praise anything good to drink but water."

Merrihew roared.

"Well, here's your station, Dan. Shall I see you tomorrow?"

"Eight-thirty in the park. Nothing like a horse for a headache."

Hillard arrived home tired and sleepy, but as he saw a letter on the stand in the hall his drowsiness passed quickly. There was no other blue envelope like it. She now had his house address; she was interested enough to look it up. She did not follow his lead and write in Italian; she wrote in English—crisp English too. Again there was neither beginning nor ending. But this was a letter. There was something here of the woman, something to read and read again:

I had told the maid to burn your letter, but she left it on the floor where I had thrown it, and I came across it this morning. It looked rather pathetic. So I am writing you against my better judgment. Yes, I know your name. I find that I am well acquainted with people you know. I am a woman who often surrenders to the impulse of the moment. I may or may not answer any future letter from you. You write very good Italian, but it will surprise you to learn that I detest all things that are Italian. Once I loved them well. Why should you wish to know me? Our ways are as divergent as the two poles. Happy because I sing? There are some things over which we can sing or laugh, but of which we cannot speak without crying. Happy or unhappy, what can this matter to you? To you I shall always remain the lady in the fog. Are you rich, young, talented? I care not in the least. Perhaps it amuses me to add to your confusion. Find me? I think not. Misguided energy!

Hillard put the letter away, extinguished the lights and passed up to his room. This was a direct challenge. He would accept it. This time he would use no personal to tell her that a letter awaited her. She should make the inquiries herself. And from the mail clerk he would obtain a description of the elusive Mme. Angot. Next morning he rode in the park with Merrihew. Again he saw the veiled lady on the Sandford black. Out of normal curiosity he telephoned the stables and made inquiries. The reply was short. No one at the stables knew the lady, but she rode the horse on proper authority.

That night he wrote:

I shall keep on writing till you cease to reply. Let me be frank with you. I am bored. So are you. The pleasure you derive in keeping up this mystery engages you. You bid me to find you. I accept the challenge. You must understand at once that it is the mystery that interests me. It is the unknown that attracts me. I am mentally painting you in all sorts of radiant colors. You defy me to find you. There is nothing so reliable as the unexpected, nothing so desperately uncertain as a thing assured. I warn you that I shall lay all manner of traps, waylay your messengers, bribe them. I shall find out where you live. The rest will be simple.

She replied:

I have no desire to alleviate your confessed boredom. Your persistence would be praiseworthy if well directed. Waters wear away stone, the wind crumbles the marble, but a woman is not moved till she wishes to be. I never thought that I should dabble in an intrigue of this sort, and I am surprised at the amusement it affords me. I really owe you some gratitude. The few I have met who know you tell me that you are a "nice young man."

Every man has some portion of self love. So his next effort was a passionate denial that he was "nice." When should he meet her? The postman brought him a letter which contained one word—Nimmer! He sent her four pages, a frank and witty description of himself and his friends.

On the day she received this letter a cablegram came to her from the far Mediterranean. Whatever it contained had the effect to cause all restraint to disappear from the tone of her letters. They became charming, and more and more Hillard found himself loving a voice. All his watching, all his traps, came to no successful end. She was too clever for him. He sought the mail department of the great newspaper; the clerk couldn't remember, there were so many calling for mail. Letters passed to and fro daily now, but always she declared that it was impossible for them to meet. No, it was out of the question to dine with him in a restaurant. It was equally out of the question to cook a dinner where she lived, as she and her maid dined at a small restaurant near by. Finally he proposed to bring the dinner all cooked from the club. Two days went by without a sign; then the blue letter came.

Magistrate Dumble acted leniently with a young man of seventeen this morning, who was charged with misappropriating a small amount of money, which he collected for his employer.

The young man was advised as to the proper course to pursue in the future, and left the court without any conviction being registered against him.

WAS STUNNED BY LIGHTNING AND HAD IT'S LEG BROKEN

Mr. W. Howden will probably lose a valuable brood mare as a result of the storm on Wednesday evening.

The mare, with a colt three weeks old, was pasturing on the farm of Mr. Harold Snowden, Monaghan, and when he found her on Thursday morning lying in the pasture field, with one of her fore legs fractured.

It is thought that the mare was stunned by lightning, and in falling broke her leg.

Dr. Rogers was called, but it is feared that the animal will have to be shot.

GROWTH OF PRINCE RUPERT; AN INTERESTING LETTER FROM PETERBORORGH BOY

Mr. Robert Mann of 214 London-st., has received a letter from his son Edward, who is located in Prince Rupert, depicting the many opportunities of the G.T.P. terminus, also the laying out of the city into business, manufacturing and residential sections. Following is the letter;

Prince Rupert, July 17, 1910.

Dear Father.—

The townsite is divided into nine sections, of which 2, 3, 4 and 9 are as yet G.T.P. reserve, that is the G.T.P. still hold them and for some time it will be impossible to procure any property in those sections. Sec. 1 is the business section now and in time it will spread back into section 6. Just now section 5 is partially a business and partially a residential section. No 6 is wholly a residential section and is the best section in town for that purpose. After the railroad comes through and the town has a chance to grow and the street cars are running, the best residential parts will be section 7 and 9, the latter particularly, as on account of its elevation and the smooth surface being especially adapted for that purpose.

This section is on a hill known as Montreal Hill. Its location is very similar to that of Mount Pleasant, (in Vancouver) where the homes of the business men are nearly all located. On the map you will notice Hay's Cove Circle and Seal Cove Circle. Both of these places are, or will be parks. The former is on the townsite of Hay's Creek, a pretty fresh water stream. Seal Cove is the name given to the bay at the end of the island and is a beautiful place.

There are at present several saw mills at Seal Cove, all doing a good business, and there is a large cold storage plant in course of erection. There is good water power there and it is bound to become an important centre. Keep your eye on the map and you'll be able to see why I picked on the lot of my choice for you.

In the south of the town will be located the poorer business section, and the laboring people's dwellings, and naturally all the best residences and outside business houses will locate on the opposite side of the town. You'll find McBride street opposite where I've marked X. At the foot of the street the Government wharf is under construction. This is to be one of the principal streets. You'll notice that its the only one cuttting the full width of the town.

At the mouth of Hay's Cove is to be built the largest dry docks on the Pacific Coast. The Government has already granted a subsidy and guaranteed their maintenance for 20 years.

6th avenue which has the only plank road yet, is too hilly for hauling and see by an article in to-night's paper that that road is to be built. This immediately increases the value of the lot. The lot is cleared (but for a few stumps) and is very level. I bought it from Mack for $425, cash equity $370. It had been listed for $450, by taking off commission he let me have it for $425. We changed it Saturday night (with 2 others Mack has near) to $500 and now that the announcement re the road is out it will be shoved up another $50. I don't think I could have got a better bargain in town and you can feel sure of making money on it, and there's this about it—if by any chance I shouldn't be able to sell by next June I'll buy it myself at market value. As I say, the cash equity is $370, so I still have $130 to your credit here. I'll hold it for awhile and may see a chance of using it before long. I thought it better to have the lot put in my name to save time and trouble in negotiating should we have to make a quick sale.

Things are rather quiet just now, but the first of Aug. will see the beginning of a strong movement for the new civic work starts then and that will mean the employment of from two to five hundred men on grading, road making, sidewalks, sewers, waterworks, telephone and electric light, also the G.T.P. are about to reconstruct their docks, the Government wharf is started, the new city hall will be erected shortly, also a new post office.

A hospital is in course of erection and a large school is about completed. All this with the numerous (or rather numberless) private dwellings will keep things with an upward tendency till the railroad gets through.

I think I told you before that the bridge at Lanardi rapids has been the handicap for the road builders. This obstacle is at last overcome and they'll be hauling supplies over it this week some time.

The "Belle of Scotland," a huge ship, landed here last week and is now discharging its cargo of 3000 tons of steel rails. Two months ago the "Belle of Spain" brought 3500 tons and other boats have left us smaller cargoes. These rails are brought around Cape Horn from Sydney, Cape Breton, and this last ship made a record trip in 57 days. I managed to secure several good snap shots of this boat and will send you some views when I find time to develop and print them.

Our weather is nearly perfect despite the knocking received on the subject by the outside and jealous towns, of which Vancouver is the leader. Since the first of July we have had but 2 days rain and the weather man predicts a continuance of this acceptable spell.

Stewart, I presume, forms a topic of interest for eastern papers, and the townsite property has been boomed to a standstill. The prices are so inflated as to prohibit any further movement in town real estate. The mines though are, without doubt, all that is claimed for them. The Roosevelt, Portland and Red Cliffe and Little Joe O.K., are about the pick of the bunch. Our dear relative, Uncle Dan Mann, was here to-day on his way to Stewart and the Bitter Creek country. I'll send you a copy or two of the Optimist, I should send more, but I'm financially close these days.

There's a boat coming in now and I must hie me to the wharf and see if there are any customers to be caught. I'll write you again shortly and will keep you posted continually.

I am,
Your loving son
ED.

SPORTING NEWS

ATHLETIC STARS WILL BE HERE FOR PENMAN MEET

George Goulding, of Toronto, holder of the best time for the one mile walk, will be one of the athletic lights to be here for the Penman meet, at Riverside Park, on Labor Day. He has entered for the one mile handicap, open event, one of the three specials. Although there will be between fifty and sixty entrants for the various events from Toronto and representatives from Kingston, Orillia, Brantford, Belleville and Trenton will also be present.

The programme recently published in the Review, together with all necessary information and an entry slip, can be secured from the secretary, Mr. J. J. Thompson, physical director of the local Y.M.C.A.

The track at Riverside Park is nearly completed, and the grounds will be an ideal place for putting on these games.

Many of the best athletes in Canada will take part and this assures the success of the affair, great interest is being taken by the aspirants for athletic honors, in the city, and the Peterborough "Y" will have a strong team.

BRIEF AND BREEZY

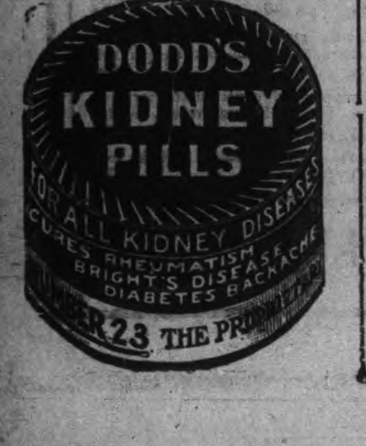
The All Stars and T.A.S. will not cross bats at the park to-morrow afternoon, as they hav given the public to understand. These city league four flushers ought to get the muzzle, or else go back to the corner lots to get away with their surplus steam. The local ball monopolists have been complaining all season about poor gates, and yet at the same time they euchre the fans with every hand.

Pitcher Addie Joss, of the Cleveland club, has been compelled to quit the game on account of strained tendons in his money arm.

A despatch from Ashbury Park says: With a pair of broken ribs, "Cy" Parkin the star pitcher of the Newark Eastern League Club, probable pennant winners in Pat Powers' circuit this season, dashed into the surf at Fifth avenue yesterday afternoon and rescued Eddie Dashiell, a twelve-year-old Baltimore lad, from drowning. Parkin was rewarded with $50 for his act of heroism by the lad's father, who reached the beach just as his boy was saved.

Rochester beat Newark yesterday and the two clubs are tied in the percentage column with .600 each.

Merton Kent, who was drowned in Lake Ontario yesterday was a member of the Argonaut Rugby Club of Toronto, and was well known in this city. He played on the half back division.



ROUND FIVE OF TENNIS TOURNEY

Appended hereto will be found a copy of round 5, in the city tennis tournament. Play the games as promptly as possible and make your report immediately, as it is urgent that the finals be arranged as early as the schedule will permit.

JIMMY BRITT WANTS TO BE ON THE STAGE

Jimmy Britt may return to America a year hence, but it will not be to enter the roped arena. Jimmy says he is through with the boxing game so far as competing for purses is concerned.

The former champion lightweight is a great favorite in England, the same as he is in America. Jimmy is a fine little fellow, never obtrusive, but always there at the right time. Once before he had a try at being an actor. Then he was considered only as a pugilist-actor, but this time he intends to go after the stage seriously.

There will be a boxing contest at the finish of an act he has in contemplation, but he does not expect the success of his stage venture to depend entirely on this. Considering that the sketch he is to have is to be based on a story of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Jimmy's next stage appearance looks like a sure go from the first tap of the gong.

Jimmy had been thinking of the stage ever since he went to London, but he did not want to make the attempt until he had just what he considered right. He has been a great reader of Doyle's stories, and on account of the author's interest in sports he thought he might induce him to write a sketch. He wrote Sir Arthur a letter and received a polite reply.

GOLF

All members of the Golf club are asekd to be at the club house Monday, Civic holiday, when the president and captain's teams will play for prizes.

STRATTON TROPHY

The finals in the above contest will be played to-morrow afternoon between C. Hill and S. Ray.

KEPT BOY IN CAGE

New York, Aug. 2.—A despatch to the World from Frankfort, Ind., says; Charged with cruel treatment of their son, Ora Leais and wife, living near here, are in jail. They are accused not only of neglecting the boy, but of keeping him in a wire cage while they were away from home.

Probation officers who investigated the case say the child was placed in the cage and was almost starved.

Leais says he is determined to rear the boy according to his ideas, and that he had him in the cage at times to keep him from associating with undesirable children. He and his wife were held under heavy bonds.

THE GENUINE ALWAYS SUPERIOR TO THE IMITATION

The experienced buyer never permits the shrewd merchant to convince him that an imitation is superior to the genuine advertised article. In refusing a substitute he protects himself and the manufacturers who have expended enormous sums in giving the public information regarding their products.

Advertised articles have stood the test of public approval on their merits and materials embracing their make-up The mere fact that they are imitated is competent testimony of their worth.

You are safe in rejecting the article offered as "just as good."

REV. J. G. POTTER ACCEPTS THE CALL TO THE MacVICAR MEMORIAL CHURCH, MONTREAL

Delegation From That Church Waited on Presbytery of Peterborough — Committee From St. Andrew's Desired Very Much to Have Pastor Remain Here —Appreciative Words for Mr. Potter.

At a meeting of the Presbytery of Peterborough this morning the call extended to Rev. J. G. Potter from the MacVicar Memorial Church, Montreal, was considered.

The call was supported by an able delegation from Montreal. The Presbytery of Montreal was represented by Rev. Mr. McClennan, and three members of the congregation of the MacVicar Memorial Church.

A THRIVING CHURCH.

Very strong reasons why Mr. Potter should accept the call were advanced by the delegation. The rapid growth of the section of the city in which MacVicar Memorial church is situated were referred to.

It used to be an annex of Montreal, but now is a part of the city proper and has grown in the last ten years from five to forty thousand. The church was established ten years ago and has been growing with that section of the city. There is a large Sabbath school and all the seats of the church are occupied by the congregation.

The members of the congregation are of the better class of people who have moved to that section of the city from older parts of Montreal. The congregation is so large that it will be necessary to add to the capacity of the present church or else build a new one.

The call extended to Mr. Potter was a unanimous one.

LOATH TO LOSE PASTOR.

In reply to these reasons a committee from the congregation of St. Andrew's urged on the Presbytery that Mr. Potter should remain in Peterborough and also read a resolution passed at last night's meeting of the congregation, in which the conviction was expressed that Mr. Potter's work was not finished in Peterborough. The committee spoke of what he had accomplished in St. Andrew's and in the city, and dwelt on the services he had rendered in a public way.

When the call was placed in Mr. Potter's hands he declared his willingness to accept it.

PRESBYTERY'S APPRECIATION.

The members of the Presbytery spoke in high appreciation of Mr. Potter's pastorate and work in Peterborough.

Strong emphasis was placed on his public services, and it was stated that in his departure for Montreal a leader among men was being lost, and one who exerted a splendid influence in moulding the higher thought and life of the city.

HE WON TWO BETS.

A Story of Baseball Rivalry Between Two Teams.

By CLARA B. TUCKER.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Beatrice Barr was born a tomboy. At ten wrestling with her brother, two years her senior, she downed him. From fourteen to sixteen it was all horseback with her—no saddle preferred. At seventeen she quieted down a bit.

About this time Tom Barr, her brother, was chosen captain of the Arlington baseball club. Beatrice at the meets of her brother's club with other clubs never failed to occupy a front seat on the grand stand with a card and a pencil in her hand, and those about her always depended on her for the score. She was very keen to see the correct side of all disputed points, and often an umpire would take her opinion in preference to his own.

Now, the great rivals of the Arlingtons, captained by Tom Barr, were the Crescents, led by Dick Thruston. The Arlingtons had kept the lead of the Crescents till Thruston took command of the latter. After that there came a series of defeats for the Arlingtons that made Captain Barr furious. Thruston was a splendid specimen of male youth. With a superb figure, great muscular strength and a quick, springy step he was to be admired from an artistic point of view. And, a born commander, he was just the man to organize and captain a baseball team. What assured his success was that he was a first class pitcher.

At the end of the season Thruston had placed his team so far ahead of Barr's that the latter made up his mind to reorganize for the next season with a view to regaining the position he had lost. He was busy all winter examining and testing the skill of applicants and by spring had got together as likely a lot of boys as ever composed a baseball club. But in spite of all he could do he could not find a pitcher to match Dick Thruston.

Rumors of Barr's efforts reached the ear of the rival captain, and he, too, bestirred himself. The team he selected was as much better than the team he had led the season before as Tom's was superior to the one which had been defeated. And so it was that when the series of games was entered upon the Arlingtons and the Crescents were evenly matched except that the latter could outpitch the former.

Nevertheless Tom Barr entered upon the season's games with considerable confidence. He bantered Thruston as to what he would do with him, and Thruston, who was as much of a thoroughbred as a baseball player, only smiled and said: "I'd like to see you do it, Tom. There's no fun with the luck all on one side."

"I'll tell you what I'll do," said Tom. "I'll bet you a hat we beat you on the games during the season."

"All right," replied Thruston. "I'll take that."

"And I'll make you another bet. I'll bet you a box of cigars against a dozen pairs of gloves that we'll beat you at least one game with a man short on our team."

"I don't quite understand that," said Thruston.

"Do you take the bet?"

"Anything you like."

"Done." And Tom repeated the terms of the two bets.

"Another thing," Tom continued. "There's only one person I can get to match you in pitching—a negro. Do you object to playing against one of the colored race?"

"Not if my team don't. I'll speak to them about the matter."

Thruston soon after sent Captain Barr permission to introduce a negro into the game if required.

The agreement between the two clubs was that they were to play seven games, four to win, the games to be played on alternate Saturday afternoons, beginning with the second Saturday in April. There was great interest manifested on the part of the friends of the two teams, and when the first game was played the grand stand was packed and much of the standing room was taken up. A fine lot of boys on each side were arrayed, and the play from the first was the finest that had ever been played between the Arlingtons and the Crescents. The regular pitcher was in place for the former, Barr not having availed himself of the permission he had received to use the negro. After a hard fought game the Arlingtons won by a few runs.

When the game was finshed some said that it had been won by Beatrice Barr's presence and encouragement. At any rate, she was adored by the members of her brother's team, and there was not one of them who would not give his head to serve her. A few, while attributing the Arlingtons' success to her, referred that success to a far different cause. They said that if Captain Thruston had kept his eyes off Beatrice Barr and fixed his attention on the game the score would have been very different.

The second game was played under very much the same conditions, and again the Arlingtons won. By this time a number of the Crescents had noticed that their captain was not doing his best, and one of them went to him and expostulated. Thruston knew very well what was the matter with him, though he did not reveal the secret. He promised that the next game should show up very differently.

And it did. Barr fixed his attention on the game and won it by half a dozen runs—not only that, but he beat the next, the fourth game. During both the third and fourth games Beatrice Barr was not present. It was given out that she was ill. Some malicious spectators declared that she had been bribed by the Crescents with ten pounds of candy to keep away. This only excited merriment. All knew that she was wrapped up in the success of her brother's team. But when the fifth game came round and she was again absent, the Crescents winning, many who had noticed Thruston's bad play while she was present looked knowing and whispered to one another that they believed there might be something in the bribery story after all. Beatrice was not in her seat at the sixth game; but, despite her absence, the Arlingtons won.

Each team had now won three games, and the seventh was to decide the championship. Beatrice Barr told some of her most intimate girl friends that she would love to see the game, but she had understood that unpleasant remarks had been made about the effect of her presence on the result and she had decided to remain away from the grand stand. She was not in her seat when the deciding game was played, but it was said that she watched it from behind the blinds of a house overlooking the oval.

When the teams went out on to the field a negro was noticed among the Arlingtons. Captain Thruston was about to protest when he remembered that he had agreed that Barr should use a negro pitcher if he chose. Some surprise was indicated that a boy of his size was expected to do extra fine pitching. He was but average height, and his muscles did not show under his loose suit. But when he began to pitch the secret came out. He could do things with a baseball that a champion billiardist can work with the ivories. Few could hit his balls, and those who did usually sent them straight up in the air, to be caught by the outs.

During the changes from the bat various persons, mostly from among the Crescents' side, attempted to get near the colored pitcher to have a look at him or question him, but he managed to keep pretty well away from them and would only answer "Yes" or "No." Finally, seeing that he was not to be interviewed, they let him alone. The Crescents held the last inning, the negro pitching. The Arlingtons led in the score by two runs. Thruston was at the bat, and it was expected that he would make a hit to enable the men on the bases to get in, three men hoping to complete their runs and win the game. But the negro served the balls with such curves that Thruston either sent them straight up in the air or they struck the ground near his feet. Finally, one of his skyrockets being caught, the game was lost to the Crescents. Dick Thruston dropped his bat and with a chivalry for which he was noted strode forward with outstretched hand to congratulate the pitcher for having won the game for his team. But the negro, instead of waiting for him, ran away at the top of his speed and disappeared from the oval.

Tom Barr ran up to Thruston and said:

"I've won two bets from you, Dick."

"What two bets?"

"Bets we made at the beginning of the season—one that we'd beat you on the score of games, the other that we'd beat you a game one man short on our team."

"You've won the first, but I don't see how you've won the second."

"Come round to the house this evening and I'll explain."

That evening Thruston, having doffed his baseball clothes, in immaculate attire called at the Barrs'. He found Tom with Beatrice, who was dressed in her most becoming costume. She hung her head before the gaze of her admirer.

"You told me today," Tom said to Dick, "that you didn't understand how I had won our second bet. The last game was played with eight men and a girl. There is the girl. She's been two hours washing off the burnt cork."

Dick stood looking at Beatrice in astonishment; then he repeated his act at the close of the game. He seized her hand and poured forth a volume of congratulations and compliments.

The most important feature connected with the struggle between the Arlington and Crescent teams was the announcement in the autumn of the engagement of Dick Thruston and Beatrice Barr.

Britain's Power Questioned.

The Hague, Aug. 5.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Dealing with the first question before the tribunal as to the right of the United States to have regulations made for fisheries, Elihu Root said that the two nations approached this subject from entirely different points of view. Great Britain approached it from the standpoint of her sovereignty, while the States did so from their guaranteed right.

It was for the tribunal to draw the line between what is competent for Great Britain to do in the exercise of her sovereign power and what was incompetent for Great Britain to do with respect to the modification of American treaty rights.

He contended these rights could not be restricted or destroyed by regulations made by one who gave the rights, nor could the grantor alone be allowed to say what was reasonable, fair, appropriate and necessary for fisheries which the United States fishermen have been admitted to share in.

Pie or Plato?

The devotees of the old fashioned idea of education for scholarship, of the value of scholastic attainment for its own sake, of the worth of culture as apart from its possible aspect of utility, might just as well fold up their tents and, like the Arab, quietly steal away.

They are done for. It is high time to be admitting it.

One by one the institutions of higher education have been knuckling down to the popular demand for dishwashers and home cooks.

And now Miss Caroline Hazard, president of Wellesley college, has joined the housekeeping brigade. "The day of the scheduled scholastic life is past," said President Hazard in her annual report. "In common with all so called higher institutions of learning, Wellesley must be ready to prepare its graduates for a useful and active life in the world."

In this connection President Hazard recommended the establishment of a new course in economics to have special reference to household management.

Now, it were a great pity to cast a word of reproach at the movement toward the proper understanding of household science which has swept over the country recently. It must without doubt be set down as one of the sanest and most helpful educational efforts that the last decade has seen.

With the ever increasing number of institutions who need women at their heads who are skilled in the science of housekeeping, it is essential that more and more women should qualify themselves for expert service of this sort And, too, with the changed conditions in the home, where the tendency is no longer for girls to learn the homely arts of cooking and sewing from their mothers, there is a definite need for class room instruction in these branches.

But why must every cultured college in the country open its doors to the science of pie baking? A gentle and noble art in very truth it is. But must it rub elbows with the study of the poets and the thinkers of the world? Must it lock step with the pursuit of the significant facts in the world's history? Is what is left of four years, after time for basketball, fraternity dances, college plays and committee meetings is taken out, too much to spend in the atmosphere of mere books?

Doubtless it is. One forgets that only old fogies would refuse to class pie with Plato.

Queen Alexandra is having her personal effects packed preparatory to leaving Bunkingham Palace for good.

Indisputable Evidence.

You have read our oft-repeated statement, "In use for over 30 years." It was in the early sixties that the prescription now universally known as Castoria was first made use of. With a record of over fifty, under five years of age, out of every hundred deaths, it was the AMBITION OF EVERY PHYSICIAN to discover a remedy suitable for the ailments of infants and children that would decrease this distressing mortality. In Castoria that relief has been found.

Let us take the statistics covering the deaths in the City of New York for the past 30 years, and here we find the benificent effect of a combination of drugs excluding opiates and narcotics so long sought for, namely: CASTORIA.

Of the total number of deaths in New York City in 1870, 50 per cent. were under five years of age; in 1880, 46 per cent.; in 1890, 40 per cent.; in 1900, 35 per cent. only. Just stop to think of it.

Until 1897 no counterfeits or imitations of Castoria appeared on drug store shelves, but since that date Mr. Fletcher has been called upon to suppress a number of these frauds. While the record for 1900 does not come down to our expectation it is owing to the carelessness of mothers when buying Castoria. The signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is the only safeguard.

MOURNING COSTUMES.

In Summer All White Is Appropriate For Deepest Black.

Mourning costumes for very young girls are always somewhat of a problem. In summer all white is now considered appropriate for even deepest mourning, but the frocks must be of the simplest, without any lace or embroidery trimming.

White organdie trimmed with insertions of net or point d'esprit lace or with white crape is permissible even in deepest mourning for afternoon or evening wear for a very young girl. Sheer white lawn or mull made up with the utmost simplicity and even white dotted swiss is correct for summer afternoons.

For tennis or golf a black belt, tie and hat will not give the effect of second mourning, but will serve to distinguish between the severe style of white dress that is today so regularly worn during the forenoon.

HAT FOR YOUNG WIDOW.

One or two black lawn or batiste dresses, a black linen and a black rajah or pongee coat and skirt costume will be found necessary in a summer mourning outfit for a young girl. White pongee is permissible for lighter mourning, and coat and skirt costume in this material are much in vogue still.

The hat and veil illustrated are very smart for a young widow. The veil is of crape bound brussels net.

Hail Riddles Car Windows.

Prescott, Aug. 5.—The local train on the C.P.R. from Ottawa to Prescott, due here at 4.50 p.m., arrived last night minus almost every pane of glass.

About three o'clock, when pulling out of Manotic, the train ran into a cloudburst, accompanied by a terrific wind. The train could be felt rocking heavily. The hail was so heavy that every window in the cars was broken instantly.

One lady, who had her watch on her wrist, reported the hail having come through the window, and in addition, had sufficient force to break the crystal on her watch.

The party consists of Prof. Libby, of the University of North Dakota; Prof. Starr of Chicago, and an Indian interpreter. Rev. H. G. Gunn of Winnipeg, who has made a study of ethology and had made a special study of Indian folk lore, will accompany the party

Ontario's Apple Yield Decreasing.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Aug. 5.—In an address before the annual convention of the International Shippers' Association, over the river yesterday, Prof J. W. Crow of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, did not speak enthusiastically of Ontario's apple growing. He said apple growing in Ontario was fast on the decline. The prime cause for this was the number of unscrupulous buyers throughout the province. They offered such low prices and treated growers so unfairly that apple orchards were fast being replaced with other fruits.

He estimated that the apple shipments from Ontario centres this year would be: Chatham, 1,000 to 2,000 barrels; Alviston, three cars; Wyoming, 19 cars; Watford, 1,500 barrels; Grimsby, six cars; Ingersoll, 4,500 barrels; Trenton, 7,000 barrels; Thornbury, 12,000 barrels; Durham, 2,000 barrels; Jordan, 20 cars; Oshawa, 8,000 barrels; Wicklow, 3,500 barrels; Sparta, 3,000 to 5,000 boxes; St. Catharines, 6,000 to 6,500 barrels.

AN OUTRAGE ON ENGLISHMEN

The Gloucestershire Chronicle prints the following story of the experiences of a party of Englishmen that endeavored to enter Canada:—

"In view of the fact that several young Gloucester men having recently emigrated to Canada, and probably others contemplating trying their fortunes in the Dominion, the following story of the experience of a party of Englishmen (including a nephew of Mr. S. Moors, of Lower Guiting), who recently sailed for Canada, will be read with interest:

Mr. Gerratt, of New Basford, says: "A short time ago thirteen of us were engaged to go into Messrs. Penman and Company's Canadian hosiery mills at a town called Paris, Ont. We were engaged by the month at six dollars a week, and to pay our fares back again in two years. We sailed on the Victorian on May 13, landing at Quebec on May 20.

"When we got to the Customs Office we were asked several questions as to employment, how much money had we, etc. We told them we had our passage paid out, together with a guarantee of several years' work. One of our party had £10, another £6 and we all had a little money.

A WEEK IN AN IMMIGRATION HOSPITAL.

"After answering these questions we were detained in a room for several hours. At the end of that time we were marched out, and without any explanation of any sort were put in a carriage. We enquired where we were off to, and the officer then said we were going to catch the 1.30 train to Paris (our destination.) Having no cause to doubt his word, we meekly submitted to being driven off. We were driven for a matter of three miles, when the driver pulled up at what was called an 'Immigration Hospital.' There we were detained for a full week without any explanation of any sort, and were fed on tea, sour bread, and salt butter. We sent several messages to the firm we were going to, and we firmly believe the messages never went out of the place, as we had to trust to them to do the posting and telegraphing, giving them the money. We could not post them ourselves, as we were kept prisoners all the time, and watched day and night.

NUMBERED LIKE CONVICTS.

"We endured it for a week, when on the Friday (May 27) the official of this place shouted out numbers (we were all numbered like convicts.) They told us we were going out, and when we asked where to, he replied 'to our destination,' again deceiving us. Well, we were put in a carriage and drove straight to the Customs Office, where our luggage was put on, and then we were driven on to the boat, the same we went out on. We were sent back without an explanation of any description. We passed the three doctors and got the medical stamp.

"Since we have been in England we have learned that the firm heard nothing from us, although we gave the officials the letters and telegrams. The firm also gave us several messages, but we never heard a word from them. Thinking it possible that we were detained through insufficient cash, the firm sent the Custom officials 350 dollars for our release, but they returned it, and told them they were sending us on.

The next thing they heard that we were half way across the sea.

"This is one sample of how Englishmen are treated at Port Quebec."—Sons of England Record.

ENJOYABLE HOPS AT CHEMONG

First of Thursday Night Dances Given Last Evening--Successful Function

A brilliant dance was held at Chemong Park last evening, it being the first of a series which will be given every Thursday evening by the cottagers and guests.

Despite the threatening weather the dance was largely attended and was a splendid success. The pavilion was thronged, and the grounds also crowded with onlookers, who appeared to enjoy the lively strains of the music as much as the dancers.

Halpany's five-piece orchestra provided the incentive to the tripping of the light fantastic and played excellent music until 11.30, when the dancing was discontinued.

There was a large number from town, and all spoke in highest terms of the entertainment provided, and assured Mr. W. B. Rickey of their support and attendance at future "hops."

All accounts due to the firm of Simpson & Young not paid before August the 15th will be handed to a solicitor for collection. 2d1w

IF YOU WANT TO FIGHT IT OUT

From the age of 45 years the eyes have undergone a natural change (which no eye escapes), so that they are either out of focus for distance or near vision, especially at night. You cannot see distinctly with the paper a foot from the eyes and you need strong light. Your real need is suitable glasses. If you want to fight this difficulty out with nature you may do so, millions have done it before you and have been worsted in the fight. We are relieving the eyes of such cases every day. Perhaps you will be wise by taking the matter in time.

TROOPS BEING RUSHED IN Government Fears Demonstration In San Sebastian.

Madrid, Aug. 6.—Alarmed by fears that the proposed demonstration of the clerical forces at San Sebastian, the summer capital, will assume the character of an uprising, the Government yesterday commenced to rush troops into San Sebastian. A regiment of hussars left Madrid for San Sebastian yesterday, followed by another regiment of cavalry and two battalions of chausseurs. A regiment of the infantry was also ordered to San Sebastian from Vittoria.

Both Gen. Weyler, the captain-general of Catalonia, and Count Sagasta, the Minister of the Interior, will go to San Sebastian, to be in immediate charge in case of disorder.

The Government believes that the Carlists and the members of the religious orders, which are numerous in Northern Spain, are openly inciting their followers to violence. The governors of the Basque Provinces and the adjoining Province of Navarre yesterday issued orders to the mayors of all the municipalities in these provinces to warn the Roman Catholics against assembling or entering the city of San Sebastian with arms, and that the most energetic measures would be taken to repress any attempt at a manifestation.

Catholics Gathering.

Bilbao, Spain, Aug. 6.—Since the Government has ordered the railroad companies not to furnish special trains for the proposed demonstration at San Sebastian Sunday, the Catholic adherents are already commencing to leave for the summer capital upon the ordinary trains.

Blame Freemasons.

Rome, Aug. 6.—That the Freemasons are at the bottom of the strained relations between the Vatican and the Spanish Government, and that they find in Canalejas, the Spanish Premier, a ready tool, is the declaration of Cardinal Ferrari. He says:

"The whole thing is the result of the anti-clerical wind which swept over France, crossed the Pyrenees, and is now blowing through Spain. The Church has won more difficult battles in the past, and it must not be forgotten that the nations that have quarrelled with her have brought on their own ruin."

PARENT WANTED HIS CHILD

Father Charged With Attempted Abduction of Boy In Toronto.

Toronto, Aug. 6.—After a hurried flight from Toronto a year ago, Thomas F. Hamilton, typewriter salesman of St. Louis, Mo., returned to the city yesterday and was arrested last night by Detective Mitchell, at 12 Harvard avenue. He is charged, upon a warrant dated March of last year, with abducting his own six-year-old son, Almer, from the custody of his mother, Mrs. C. E. Hamilton, 67 Cecil street, in January, 1909. He is also charged with doing actual bodily harm upon the mother in August of last year in a second attempt to kidnap the boy.

The story has been a dramatic one. Since Mrs. Hamilton divorced her husband in the United States in 1907, until in January of last year, he abducted the lad in the crescent at Knox College, when he was on his way to school and took him to St. Louis, where the mother went in March and regained possession of the child. In August last a man came to board with Mrs. Hamilton. That night her husband drove up in a taxicab and, save for the intervention of the driver, would have again succeeded in getting possession of the child.

The driver refused to run his machine with the boy on board, and he was returned to the mother and Hamilton fled.

A further charge of assault was then laid by Mrs. Hamilton.

Yesterday he was seen in Harvard avenue and last night was got at the home of a relative there.

He was admitted to bail in the sum of $2,000 despite the protests of the wife, who declares that she fears he will again attempt to secure the boy. As Detective Mitchell was taking Hamilton from the house last night, a taxicab drove up and a man entered to tell Hamilton to get out, as the police were after him.

COOK OFF MY LEG DOCTOR

Paris, Aug. 4.—Electrical surgery, by which arms and legs will be painlessly amputated without recourse to knife or saw, is a development of the immediate future, according to an announcement to-day by Professor Parsonaval, one of the medical authorities of Paris.

Doctor Doyen recently showed before the Academy of Medicine the effect of an electrical current upon cancers and how a cure might be effected in this way.

Prof. Parsonaval following up these experiments, now declares he has treated the limbs of dogs with frequent electric currents, literally cooking the limbs so that they dropped off of their own account. The animals so treated, he says, did not manifest the slightest traces of suffering. When the limbs dropped off a healthy scar remained.

HOME AND PRINCIPALS IN THE RAWN TRAGEDY

LAURIER IS WRECKED COMES OUT UNHURT

Premier Emerges Unhurt From Disaster in West.

His Special Train Collides Head on With a Freight Train While Going East From Moosejaw—Engineer Is Believed to Be Underneath His Engine—None of Premier's Party Are Hurt.

Regina, Aug. 6.—While proceeding at over fifty miles an hour the special train of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, en route from Moose Jaw to Regina, collided with a westbound freight about nine o'clock last night at a point three and one-half miles west of Pense, a small town thirteen miles west of Regina. The engines were telescoped and the freight cars derailed.

The Premier, who was sitting in a chair at the time in his own car, was thrown violently to the floor, but immediately got up and informed the members of his party that he was uninjured. Others of his party were badly shaken up, but no one was seriously hurt. The crews of both engines jumped as soon as they saw that a collision was inevitable, except the engineer of the freight train, who is believed to be buried, and probably dead, beneath his engine.

The windows, mirrors and tableware of the Premier's car and in that of Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways, as well as in the press car, were shattered, and things generally badly jumbled. The Minister of Railways, who was in his own car, suffered a wrenched knee, which did not prevent him hurrying back to the Premier's car. The conductors on each train at once took the necessary precautions, and sent out signalmen in both directions.

Dr. George H. Ramsey of Pense, who was driving near the scene of the wreck, was told by a pressman what had occurred, and at once proceeded to the scene of the accident to render what assistance he could.

William Campbell, a waiter in the press car, was injured internally, and Ed. Cook, conductor of Sir Wilfrid's train, had one rib broken.

The scene presented by the two great engines, caught together in what appeared an attempt on their part to overlap each other, was spectacular and impressive. To one of the pressmen the engineer of the special stated that at Belleplaine he was going at the rate of sixty miles an hour, his train being some seven minutes behind time. How the accident occurred and how the freight came to be where it was he was unable to say. He only knew that he had the right of way over all other traffic.

TRANSPLANTED PART OF EYE

Philadelphia, Aug. 6.—A rare operation, involving the transplanting of a portion of the cornea from the eyeball of a man to that of a woman who had been blind since infancy, resulting in the restoration of her sight, has been performed at the Medico-Chirurical Hospital, and doctors are watching the case with much interest. It will be several weeks before it can be determined definitely whether the restoration will be permanent, but at present doctors say all indications point to success.

The operator was Dr. L. Webster Fox, professor of ophtalmology at the college, and one of the leading eye specialists in this city. His patients were two, a young man employed at Baldwin's locomotive works, one of whose eyes had been pierced by a piece of steel and the sight destroyed, and a young woman who had been blind since infancy. One of her eyes had been removed from its socket and she was unable to see with the other.

The cornea of her eye had become opaque through disease.

Dr. Fox decided to remove a piece of the cornea from the man's eye and place it in that of the young woman. The operation was performed about twenty days ago.

When the bandages were removed it was found that the young woman could see for the first time in her life. Her sight was not as good as that of the persons near her, but for a distance of five feet she could see distinctly.

EXPECTS TO REACH 120 YEARS

Boston, Aug. 6.—Prof. Luther O. Emerson of Hyde Park, who wrote the music to William Cullen Bryant's "We are Coming, Father Abraham," and who has just entered on his ninety-first year, declares that he expects to live at least thirty years more.

"You know I had a brother who lived to be one hundred and sixteen years of age, and I want to go him a few years better," he said. "My uncle, Ezekiel Pratt, was born in 1687 and died in 1803, and at the age of one hundred and one years was a farmer and swung the scythe as well as a younger man. My grandmother on my mother's side lived to be ninety-five years, also. Therefore, you see, I am naturally of a long-lived family."

THOUSAND LOSE JOBS WITH WINTER AT HAND

That Many Trainmen Must Seek Elsewhere For Work.

Those Who Have Committed Acts of Intimidation, Says Supt. Morley Donaldson, Will Not Be Taken Back—Grand Trunk's Loss Will Be Nearly a Million Dollars by a Conservative Estimate.

Ottawa, Aug. 6.—Supt. Morley Donaldson of the Grand Trunk, made the following statements after his return from Toronto yesterday.

"The opinion in Toronto and all along the main line is that the strike settlement is an absolute victory for Mr. Hays and the G.T.R. One thousand men will lose their positions over the whole Grand Trunk system as a result of the strike.

"The men who will lose their positions, will do so because they have committed acts of intimidation, or the like. The others will be taken back as rapidly as possible. The men who have come on during the strike, however, will be allowed to stay as long as they wish, and where the places are filled by these new men, men who were on strike will just have to be patient and wait."

About twenty of the Ottawa strikers were taken back to work yesterday.

Grand Trunk's Loss.

Montreal, Aug. 6.—The Grand Trunk statement issued yesterday of the traffic earnings of the ten-day week which closed July shows a decrease of $448,320 in the receipts. They were $719,307, as against $1,167,357.

This only reveals a corner of the economic wreckage caused by the strike. The official statement covers the period from July 22 to July 31, inclusive.

The strike began three days before July 22, and lasted two days after the 31st, so that $224,000 may fully be added to the amount of decrease in yesterday's report, making it $672,000.

The company's weekly increases for the beginning of the present year to the date of the ordering of the strike averaged over $140,000. This average is entirely obliterated for the 15 days the strike lasted, and makes the aggregate decrease in the company's earnings alone not far short of a million dollars, to say nothing of the direct additional expense involved by the company in engaging new men, in protecting men and property from possible violence, and in otherwise fighting the strike. Something was saved in wages and something in pensions, but the latter will not enrich the ordinary accounts of the company as the contributions to the pension fund will remain the same.

DOWNEY IS APPOINTED CHIEF OF ASYLUM

He Gets Superintendency of Asylum at Orillia.

Member for South Wellington In Local House Will Retire From the Political Arena—Has Been a Great Campaigner and Is an Expert on Municipal Matters — Worked Hard In Checking Tuberculosis.

Toronto, Aug. 6.—Official announcement was made yesterday that Joseph Downey, M.P.P. for South Wellington, has been appointed superintendent of the Asylum for the Insane at Orillia. Mr. Downey has resigned his seat in the Government to take over the new appointment. The new position is worth about $2,500 a year, and carries with it a fine house and supplies. It is considered to be one of the most desirable offices in the gift of the Government.

"Everybody appreciates Mr. Downey's ability both generally and in connection with the special legislation pertinent to this especial office," said Premier Whitney yesterday afternoon. "He is a man who has a wide grasp of municipal affairs and I do not doubt that his late constituents will miss him very much."

Mr. Downey has held a seat for the riding of South Wellington since 1902, when he redeemed the riding for the Conservatives. He was for years editor of The Guelph Herald, but two years ago resigned that position to take up special writing. His literary style is known for its originality and force, and as a speaker he has a reputation for eloquence, while there are few his equal as a campaigner. Flowers of speech fall naturally from "Joe" Downey's lips, but he is capable of aggressive utterances also. His campaign for legislation aimed at checking the spread of consumption, was vigorous and determined, even though its end was a squelching by the Premier.

Mr. Downey was a member of a commission which two years ago investigated jail problems with a view to applying more humanitarian principles. The establishment of the industrial farm at Guelph may be traced in part to the commission.

Joseph Patrick Downey is his full name. He is a Roman Catholic, born of Irish parents in Wellington County in 1865. He entered the service of The Guelph Herald as a boy of 15, and in 1885 took editorial charge. He interested himself in politics early, and blossomed out as a full-fledged "stumper" in 1899, when he helped to defeat the Greenway Government in Manitoba. When he was nominated for South Wellington the hope of capturing the Liberal constituency was not great, but he went in with 227 majority, and has since stayed in. Now that he is out of the running the riding promises to be a hard battleground.

IT IS CALLED DIVORCE MICROBE

London, Aug. 6.—Prof. F. P. Wilson's paper contrasting divorce in Canada and the United States at the International Law Conference referred to the ease wherewith divorce is obtained in the United States where divorce become a primary necessity of life. The divorce microbe might be present in Canada, but its ravages are not yet serious. In the subsequent discussion, Cephas Brainerd, New York, expressed some irritation at the Canadian criticism of his country, which he said is founded on insufficient information.

Taxis Were Condemned.

New York, Aug. 6.—A half-dozen taxicab inspectors, headed by Chief Inspector Brennan, swooped down on the St. Regis, the Gotham, Manhattan and Belmont Hotels and the University Club taxicab stands Thursday evening, and twelve taxicabs were "condemned," either for having meters that registered what is termed the double fare or for having meters without lights, so the passenger could not see what was being charged.

Deported From Brockville.

Brockville, Aug. 6.—Immigration Inspector P. Devlin of Kingston, yesterday deported from here to Morristown, Robert D. Kile, an American, who was liberated from jail after serving thirty days for stealing a sum of money from a passenger on the steamer Rapids King, while the boat was at Prescott.

HUSBAND KEEPS WIFE PRISONER

Rome, Aug. 13.—According to Naples messages appearing in the newspapers a wine merchant named Read, who appears to be out of his mind, has been keeping his wife and his eleven children shut up for the last five years in a country house near Naples. He seems to have watched over his prisoners with the utmost vigilance, feeding them with small portions of maize, potatoes, eggs and sometimes of fowl.

He recently allowed the two eldest sons to take short walks in the neighborhood of the house. Although under close supervision they managed to make their plight known to some neighbors, who informed the police, with the result that the father was arrested.

The release of the prisoners afforded a very touching spectacle, the meeting between the mother and her sons after five years' separation, being most affecting.

The municipal authorities of Liverpool have demolished 12,000 unsanitary dwellings in the last 40 years.

VICTORIA PARK

Victoria Park is one of the prettiest little parks in America. Nature was good to it and so is Hedge. Mr. Hedge, is the caretaker. He is a man who takes an interest in his work. How much interest the visitor can easily see. He likes his work. That's the secret of success. Enjoy your work, and noon will slip around before you are aware. Night will come and you will say "What, another day gone?" If a man does not enjoy his work he is to be pitied.

DR. CRIPPEN

Crippen has put the finishing touches on his father. The old man is in California. His paramour in jail as well has broken her father's heart. He is in England. Isn't a man an awful ass to act like that. Awful ass, that's the exact word. He not only robs himself of his liberty, but pierces the hearts of everyone connected with him.

McLaughlin is dead. His deed, his poisoning his wife and setting fire to the house is fresh in the minds of all. Now, why in the world didn't he run away with the woman of his choice and let his wife live. They would have tired of each other and separated, and he would not have stretched a rope, and disgraced his name. Dr. Crippen is supposed to have killed his wife so that he could enjoy, unmolested, the forbidden sweets of a typewriter's love. Why kill the wife?

This is a fitting slogan for the smartest little town in Canada, a town that has trebled its population within the last few years. Why? Just because the citizens believe in themselves. They are united. Each man in the council is a publicity commissioner; each man on the Board of Trade is enthusiastic. That is why the town is booming.

FOR THE COUNCIL TO READ

From the Civilian.

The hornet is a depraved and low-lived insect, whose ferocity and pugnacity put him outside the pale of all human sympathy. His cousin, the wasp, is in the same category; but if you are looking for a nice, plain brand of depravity, we commend you to the fly, not only the musca domestica or house fly, not to all his relations, the mayfly, the sandfly, the gadfly, and all the other flies, whether their names be Latin or plain English. The industrious ant can make it interesting for you if you sit down on his territory, and the gentle gipsy moth can give you something to think about if he catches you in the shade of his old apple tree; but even they are useful and respectable creatures compared with a fly. Neither the common house fly—the Latin gent called musca domestica—nor any of his relations has one redeeming quality. He is active, frivolous, noisy, impudent, familiar, exasperating, nasty, ill-tempered, an enemy of peace, a foe of religion and morals, an asset of profanity and a constant breeder of trouble. He is now in the community. He dotes on garbage. He will come into the house as if he owned it; he will seek to drive those who live in it out; he will drive the cats frantic and goad the dogs to madness, and he will have his nose in every butter-plate, sugar bowl, milk pitcher, and everything else in the house not covered up. He laughs at screen doors and windows; he dispises fly paper; he tortures bald-headed men and sleeping women; he loves to be slapped at and damned and will express his joy soaring around your head and droning a war song. Come to think of it, the house fly has even the hornet beaten to a frazzle, for except when he is on a jag and running amuck, the hornet only delights in breaking up revivals, camp meetings and Sunday school picnics, while the house fly invades the home and respects neither age nor sex, hygiene nor menu, and is depravity in its most loathesome form. He is born in garbage and there is where he should stay.

EFFORT

In every brick that is laid, in every tree that is trimmed, and in every lawn that is mowed we see the finger of effort writtem. In every wheel that turns upon the streets, be it in car, cab, or wagon, effort reigns. By effort is all progress. Without it is death.

It is by degrees of effort that we are led to look upon some things as remarkable and others as commonplace. If we look at things closely, and weigh their relationship, we will find how much our affairs intermingle and how much the threads of our daily condition touch upon the furtherest point, the highest pinnacle of the State.

The effort we speak of this days is the effort we saw, the secret we beheld in a sewing machine in the George street store window.

It would be a long story if we were to minutely trace the working of effort through it all. There is the stamp that sent the order for the sewing machines from this Guelph firm, the making of this stamp and the gum upon it, the buying of it, the making of the penny that bought the stamp, the order-in-Council to mint the coin, the assent of the Governor-General, the recognition of the Governor-General by the King, and the recognition of the King by the people. So, see how strangely interwoven are our social conditions. There is the typewriter that wrote the order, and the firm who made the typewriter and its myriad parts. There is the copying of the letter in the letter book, and the placing it in the envelope. There is the making of the letter-book, and letter press, and the printing of the firm's name on the envelope and letter head, the printers, their type from the type founders, their ink, from the ink makers, the press from the press manufacturers, the galleys, the proof reader, the correction and final revise. Slight effort that takes the letter to the press and dries and folds it and drops it in the letter box. Slight effort, but great organization takes it from the letter box and placing it in a bag delivers it at the post-office, where it is fed to the hungry stamp killer. The same organization takes it to the station, and by the effort of steam, guided by an engineer, by the system of a general manager, superintendent, telegraph operator, and conductor, the letter ordering that sewing machine has gone away.

The order received, there is the slight effort of acknowledging it, and the vastly greater effort of making the machine. There is the effort of the moulder as he sifts his sand from the pit, where nature put it. There is the effort of the miner who brought out the coal to light the furnace. There is the effort of the miner who found the ore and the plant that melted it into pig, the effort of the fire that will lick the pig and melt it until it runs a molten stream. There is the effort of the moulder as he directs the red tongue of the dragon into the flask that awaits it, and the effort of time to cool this tongue till it takes the form of the bed of sand it made its fiery bed in. There is the effort of those who clean the casting and who mill it the effort of the one who bores the holes, who japans and bakes, who varnishes and bakes again, who ornaments and dries, the man who assembles the various parts, and the one who places the sewing machine in time. There is the effort of the man who chopped the tree that made the wood possible for the machine head to fit in, the man who cut the veneer to give the table a fineness impossible with a thicker present wood. There is the drying and the seasoning of the woods. There is the varnisher of the woodwork, the polisher and the finisher of this wood, now glued together by art so clever that to the eye of the unskilled no veneer is possible. Then comes the final testing, and on to the man who creates the machine. Then comes into play the effort of the rougher woodman, who cuts the coarser elm for the crates, the twine, and all it means to make, the nails and all that means the tags, and the man who printed the bill of direction from consignor to consignee.

So in this machine we see much of the effort and of skill, just one of the modern miracles that unnoticed pass about our streets daily.

However, we are too busy to look unless some new star or a new method of turning one inside out has been discovered.

THAT WESTERN TOUR

The managers of the Liberal party must be rather non-plussed at the reception Sir Wilfrid Laurier is meeting with in the west. The tour was intended to be a glorification of the man who persistently claims that he and not Providence is responsible for the era of fat years of prosperity which have invaded Canada. The people of the west were to be shown this native of Athabaska and they were expected to fall down and worship at the Laurier shrine. Up to date, however, there has been a great lack of the "falling down." The hard headed farmers of the west have so far persistently refused to bow before the Liberal idol and the result has been disappointing. Accustomed to the senseless flattery of political sycophants in the east, Sir Wilfrid Laurier misses the sweet insence of flattery. Out west they size a man up as he is, not for what he says he is. And if ever there was a man whose record is marred by broken pledges and forgotten promises it is he who is now headed for the Pacific Coast on a barnstorming visit with nothing to give the people but a nicely turned phrase and idle vaporings of a vain pedagogue.

With the native cunning which is one of his chief characteristics the Premier has been trimming his sails to suit every passing breeze of sentiment. Out among the English settlements of Prince Albert he was more English than the most patriotic Englishman. Love for the old land rolled from his tongue with suspiciously oily fluency. He even referred to "dear old England." What a hit that speech would make in the province of Quebec.

The man with a good steady position these days is better off than the man without one. There are signs on the business and financial horizon that suggest that there may be a slackening in business—especially in the West in the near future.

"I HONESTLY BELIEVE 'FRUIT-A-TIVES'
The Greatest Cure For Rheumatism In The World"

KNOWLTON, QUE., Oct. 12th. 1909.

"For many years, I suffered from severe Rheumatism, and the attacks were very distressing and prevented me from doing my ordinary work. I tried many remedies and physicians' treatments, but nothing seemed to do me much good, and I was becoming very anxious for fear I would become a permanent cripple from the disease.

I tried "Fruit-a-tives" and this medicine has entirely cured me and I honestly believe it is the greatest Rheumatism cure in the world."

E. E. MILLS.

Such a statement could not be bought from a man like Mr. Mills. He thinks too much of his good name, to sell it or sign it to an untruth. Mr. Mills tried "Fruit-a-tives" after all other treatment failed—and "Fruit-a-tives" cured him of Rheumatism. In the goodness of his heart, he wrote the above letter in order that sufferers in all parts of Canada would know that there is one remedy that actually does cure Rheumatism. This testimonial was entirely unsolicited on our part. We did not know that Mr Mills was taking "Fruit-a-tives" until we received the above letter.

It is a case like Mr. Mills' that proves the marvellous powers of "Fruit-a-tives" in arresting and curing disease. It may be stated, without fear of contradiction, that "Fruit-a-tives" will positively cure Rheumatism when properly used.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine in the world made of fruit juices and is the greatest Rheumatism cure known to modern science.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c. Sold by all dealers or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

I surrender. The most fatal thing in life is curiosity. It has the power to lead us into all manner of trouble. And I have my share of curiosity. Remember, you never would have found me. I may dwell in a garret; I may be hideous; perhaps nothing remains to me but my voice. And now the terms. And if you do not follow them confidently and blindly your dinner will grow cold in the carriage. Dinner will be at 8, Feb. 1. At 7 a carriage will call for you. The messenger will blindfold you. He will then proceed to the club and take the dinner and bring you here. Be warned! If you so much as lift the corner of the bandage, the romance will end then and there. I realize that I am doing something very foolish and unwise; but, as you say, I am a woman who has seen much of the world. Thus I have my worldly side. I shall use it as a buffer.

"Blindfolded!" Hillard scrubbed his chin. All these precautions! Who was she? What was she? Since there was no escape, blindfolded he would go.

At half after 6 on the night of the 1st of February, then, he began to dress. It was some time since he had taken such particular care.

"The signor seems in high spirits tonight," observed Giovanni as he laid out the linen.

"Man, I'm happy and greatly excited. Do you recollect the lady who sang under my window? I am going to meet her tonight. The mystery will be a mystery no longer."

"Ah!" Giovanni stroked his lips doubtfully. "It is not like the signor to plunge blindly into adventures like this."

"The very word, blindly. I go blindfolded, amico. What do you think of that?"

"Blindfolded?" Giovanni was horrified. "It is a trap!" he cried. "They will assassinate you! No; you shall not go! In Rome, at the carnivals, it is an old game. They will rob you."

"Take the number of the cab as I get in. If anything should happen, give the number to the police."

Giovanni, with a sharp movement of the hands, expressed his resignation to the worst. He knew the futility of arguing with his master. But he followed him down to the hall and tied on the bandage himself. He was honest about it, too, for Hillard could see nothing. Then the messenger boy took him by the hand and led him to the carriage. As the two were climbing in Giovanni spoke rapidly in his native tongue.

"There is no number on the carriage!"

"Too late to bother now."

The carriage rolled off toward the club, where the dinner, hot and smoking, was taken on.

CHAPTER V.

THE MASK.

"JOININ' th' Elks?" asked the boy when Hillard was well under way once more.

"No; it's a seance. They are going to call up my fate round a table."

"Ugh! Aw, go-wan! Dey don't call up no ghosts wit' French cider and hot boids." The boy relapsed into silence.

By and by the carriage stopped.

"Dis is where we alights, me loid!" the boy jeered. "An' no lookin', mind."

Hillard found the carriage steps and landed safely. He stood for a moment, listening. They were in a quiet part of the city; no elevated or surface cars were near. He was assured that the location was exclusive. Garrets are not to be found in quiet places.

"Look out fer th' steps," said the boy, again taking Hillard by the hand.

"And you be careful of that basket."

"I ain't lettin' it drop any."

Winding steps, thought the blindfolded man. He could recollect none. It seemed to him that they stood there five minutes before the door opened. When it did, the boy passed in the basket and resolutely pushed Hillard into the hall. The door closed gently, and the adventure was begun. Whither would it lead him?

"Take off the bandage the signor may now," said a voice in broken English.

"Thanks!" He tore the handkerchief from his eyes and blinked. The hall was so dimly lighted that he could see nothing distinctly.

"The signor's coat and hat."

He passed over these articles, shook the wrinkles from his trousers, smoothed his chin and stood at attention. The maid eyed him with abundant approval, then knocked timidly on the door leading to the drawing room.

"Avanti!" called a soft voice.

Hillard gathered in his courage, opened the door and stepped inside. On a divan near a lamp sat a woman in black. Only a patch of white throat could be seen, for her shoulders were not bare and her arms only to the elbows. Her back was turned squarely. But what a head! He caught his breath. It glowed like a copper beech in the sunshine.

"Madam?" he faltered. He spoke English and not very firmly.

The woman turned. Hillard took a step backward and blundered against a pedestal.

She was masked!

Masked! Only her mouth and chin were visible, and several little pieces of court plaster effectually disguised these. There was a mystery. He to come blindfolded and she to wear a mask—extraordinary!

"And this," she said ironically, "is the gentleman who leaned out of the window."

He brought all his faculties together for he knew he would need them in this encounter. "Supposing I had fallen out of it—well, it could not have mattered. I should not have been more at your feet than I am now." This was very good, considering how dry his tongue was.

Hillard reached a chair successfully enough, but he never could recollect how. He sat down as a bashful man sits down in a crowded ballroom, with his knees drawn in tightly and his feet at sympathetic angles.

She was masked!

Presently she laughed with malice.

"You are not comfortable in that chair."

"That is true, and yet it is soft and roomy. I am uneasy. Perhaps you recall to my subconsciousness a period in my former existence on earth, or, if you will, one of my ancestors."

"I fail to understand."

"Well, a Hillard 200 years ago had his head cut off by an ax. His executioner wore a mask."

"A mistake. Your ancestor should have been hanged."

"And I along with him, you would imply?"

"Are you not Irish? I have known Irishmen of the name of Hillard."

"They were in disguise. But I have a generous strain of Irish blood in me; otherwise I shouldn't have had the courage to follow up an adventure like this."

"Thanks. The compliment is rather ambiguous."

"My compliments cannot possibly be more ambiguous than your appearance. Surely there will be an hour for unmasking."

"It has already begun, Mr. Hillard."

"So I am the one who is to be unmasked? Well, I have only the mask nature gave to me. I wish she had been more liberal. But I shall see what can be done with it."

He took note of her teeth and felt a sudden tinge of regret. One may disguise the face and hair, but the teeth are always the same. Two lower teeth on the right side appeared to be gone; the others were firm and glistening white. It was a pity, for a woman's teeth are as much her glory as her hair.

Silence. The ruddy light on her hair fascinated him.

"What is it?" she demanded.

"Your hair," with a simplicity which silenced her. "You have the most beautiful hair I have ever seen."

"Thank you. And yet, for all you know, it may be a fine wig."

"If it is I shall never be sure of anything again. Am I in prosaic New York? Have you not by some carpet magic transported me to old Europe? If a dozen conspirators came in in cowls to render me the oath I should not be at all surprised."

"There is no magic, only a mask."

"And there is no way of seeing behind that?"

"None—absolutely none. I am told that you are a gentleman, so I am confident that you will not stoop to use force."

"Only the force of eloquence, if ever I may lay claim to that again."

"You are beginning well, for I tell you, Mr. Hillard, I shall expect but the most brilliant wit from you tonight. As for me, I shall only interpolate occasionally. Now, begin."

"I am not used to dancing without the pole."

"You must learn. Dance!"

"Upon what—nothing? And how shall I know that my dancing pleases you?"

"I agree to tell you. I wear this mask tonight because I am taking a surreptitious leaf out of my book of cares."

"You are, then, seeking a diversion?"

"Nothing more or less. Do not flatter yourself that there is anything personal or romantic on my side. I am bored."

"I am wholly in your hands," he said, "and they are very beautiful hands."

"Is there anything more beautiful than a cat's paw when the claws are hidden? Never judge a woman by her hands." Nevertheless she buried her hands in the depths of a down pillow. She had forgotten her rings. She slipped them off and managed to hide them.

"I promise to remember. Your letters"— he began diffidently. Where the deuce was his tongue? Was he to be tongued tied all the evening before this Columbine, who, with the aid of her mask, was covertly laughing at his awkwardness?

"My letters? A woman often writes what she will not say and says what she will not write. Did you not ask me to disillusion you?"

"Yes, but softly, softly. I begin to believe one thing—you brought me here to teach me a lesson. Gentlemen should never use the personal column."

"Nor should ladies read it. I am not saving any mercy for myself!" with laughter.

"Shall I begin with my past?"

"Something less horrifying, if you please!"

"I object to the word nice," he said. "I should have preferred milksop! Hadn't you better try some new kind of torture?"

This time her laughter was relaxed and joyful. And somehow Hillard felt more at ease. He was growing accustomed to the mask. He stretched his legs and fingered his nether lip.

"Have you not somewhere an invisible cloak?"

"I had one that night, which nature lent me," she answered readily. "I was so invisible to you that I heard the policeman call out your name. I thank you for insisting that I was not a chorus lady."

Here was a revelation which accounted for many things. "I haven't been very fortunate so far in this adventure."

"That is rank ingratitude. I am of the opinion that fortune has highly favored you."

"But the mask—the mask! If you heard the policeman call my name you must have heard him speak of one Leddy Lightfinger."

"I did, indeed. And is it not possible that I am that very person?"

Hillard dropped his hand toward his watch. "Why do you hate Italy?"

She sat straight, and what little he could see of her mouth had hardened.

"There will be no retrospection this evening, if you please," her voice rather metallic.

The mystery lifted its head again. One does not hate a country without a strong and vital reason. Was Giovanni partly right, after all? Was this a kind of trap—a play to gain his interest? Was her singing under his window purely accidental?

"Will you not sing?" he asked. This was an inspiration. Music might assist in melting her new reserve.

"You recollect, then, that I possess a voice?"

"It is all I have to recollect. Tell me, whither is all this to lead?"

"To the door and into the fog again."

"On my word, I'm half inclined to believe you to be an anarchist or a red or something on that order."

"Put yourself at ease. I am neither Leddy Lightfinger nor a Socialist. There are no dynamite bombs in this house."

Her severity, her irony and her apparent lack of warmth were mere matters of calculation. Her plan was to inspire him with trepidation, to keep him always at arm's length, for his own safety as well as hers. She knew something of men. She was secretly pleased with his strong face and shapely head. The chin was square, but not heavy; the mouth humorous, kindly and firm; the nose bridged, and the brown eyes, sleepy, yet with latent fires, were really handsome. She was not afraid to be alone with him, nor was it really necessary to wear a mask. But the romance in her heart that she believed to be dead was not dead, only waiting to be rekindled.

"The song you sang under my window."

"I will sing!"

"That is more than I dared to hope."

"What shall it be?" she asked.

"The song you sang under my window."

"But that is for the male voice!"

"You sang it very well nevertheless. I have a good memory too." He leaned forward, his arms crossed on his knees. Was there ever in all the world such an Arabian night?

She sang, but without that buoyant note of the first night. One after another he called out the popular airs of the old light operas. She had them all on her tongue's end.

Where had he seen that copy of Botticelli before? If only there was a little more light!

"Pardon me," he said. "You asked"—

She repeated her question, wondering what had drawn his attention.

"I like my grand opera after dinner. After dinner I shall want Verdi, Berlioz, Gounod."

"But after dinner I may not care to sing." She spoke in German.

HEAVY DAMAGE TO THE CROPS

In Peterboro County is the Result of the Recent Hail and Rain Storms—Many Fields Beaten to the Ground and Harvesting Operations Seriously Delayed

The severe hail storms and heavy rainfall this week have caused untold loss to the farmers in this section of the country.

All inquiries made by the Review to-day from the farmers elicited the same story. They are unable to work continuously at harvesting, their crops owing to the rain.

Mr. Ed. White, traveller for the Massey-Harris Co., while going around the outlying parts of Peterborough, within a radius of twenty-five miles, everywhere witnessed the destructive results of the hail.

Mr. Stevens and Mr. Sisson, who have large farms about twenty miles north of here, had their crops badly damaged and beaten down, and what was left standing is practically valueless.

A barn belonging to Mr. English, near Norwood, was struck by lightning and burned to the ground with all the contents.

Around Lakefield and Warsaw it was also learned that the crops have suffered severely.

In conversation with a well known farmer in Cavanville, Mr. Dobbin, he stated that fortunately he had not suffered to any noticeable extent by hail. The rain was blocking him, however, in his harvesting.

The effect on the crops of the heavy driving hailstorms has been disastrous in many parts of the country.

YOUTH OF FIFTEEN PAID $8.40 FOR A DRUNK

A youth of fifteen was charged at the police court this morning with having been drunk and disorderly last Sunday.

He pleaded guilty and had to put up with the usual fine for a Sunday drunk, $5.00 and $3.40 costs.

Asked where he got his liquor, he stated that a young fellow in Ashburnham gave it to him. He took it unseen from his brother's clothes.

ONE MONTH.

Alfred Meakins, who purchased a $17.00 suit of clothes from Abraham Schwartz, on the credit system, and shortly after paying the first instalment of $5.00, sold it at a second-hand store for $2.00, was given one month in jail.

Meakins was remanded to jail for sentence last week, and it was understood another charge might be laid.

This morning, however, County Crown Attorney Wood stated to His Worship that he had nothing further against the prisoner.

LURE OF WEST DRAWING FROM US MANY OF OUR BEST MEN

Said Law Society in Expressing It's Good Will and Respect to Departing Barrister—Mr. McWilliams Presented With Handsome Club and Travelling Bag

Mr. R. F. McWilliams, B.A., L.L.B, on his departure for Winnipeg, was presented by the Peterborough Law Association yesterday afternoon, with an address and a handsome club bag and brief bag. The following address was read to Mr. McWilliams, to which he replied very feelingly upon severing his connection with the Peterborough bar. Addresses were also made by Mr. D. W. Dumble, K.C., George Edmison, K.C., and other members of the association.

"At a meeting of the Peterborough Law Association held this fifth day of August, 1910, the following resolution was passed—

"Moved by D. W. Dumble, K.C., police magistrate for the city of Peterborough, and seconded by R. E. Wood, county crown attorney for the county of Peterborough, and resolved, "That this association, on the occasion of the removal to Winnipeg of Mr. R. F. McWilliams, B.A., L.L.B, and a member of this association, tendered to him an expression of the respect and good will of the members of this association.

"Mr. McWilliams was born here, and here he received in our own schools his primary education, and having received from Toronto University his degrees of Bachelor of Arts, and of Law, and from the Law Society of Upper Canada a certificate to practice, Mr. McWilliams returned to his native city to engage in the active practice of his profession, and during the last eleven years has made for himself an honorable place in this community, both as a citizen and as a member of the bar, and in addition to performing the ordinary duties of citizenship he has served the public both as an alderman and as a mayor of the city of Peterborough.

"The lure of the west is drawing from us many of our best men, and we would feel a greater regret if we did not realize that we are not losing but only lending them, to aid in the development and upbuilding of our great western provinces.

"We wish for Mr. McWilliams all the happiness and prosperity in his new field of activty, and bespeak for him a prominent place among the members of the western bar.

"We now ask him to accept in further token of our good will the accompanying gift.

"E. H. D. HALL,
President Peterborough Law Ass'n.
"E. L. GOODWILL,
"Secretary."

A letter of regret at his inability to be present on account of a business call to Toronto, was read from Mr. Hampden Burnham.

COMPANY WILL WEED OUT THE TROUBLESOME ONES

"It is the company's intention to weed out all the men that went on strike who have at any time been the cause of trouble," said a G.T.R. official to The Star this morning. "We have taken on about 2,000 new men altogether during the strike and half of these have proved to be good men; 25 per cent. of them are fair workers, and the remainder we hope will finally quit the job. It's not every man that can make himself a good railway man.

"On the entire system there are possibly a thousand or more men who during the strike and on previous occasions have given the company considerable trouble, and of these the local officials have kept a record, and their services in all probability will never be required again.

FORT ERIE OFFENDERS.

"The most trouble has been at Fort Erie, where trouble of one kind and another has been put up with for a long time," went on the official. "We have already sent some of the old men from other terminals there, and will be sending more in a few days."

This means that there will be considerable moving for the old hands and that includes a good deal of complaining on their part.

Some of the men who will possibly be moved from one terminal to another were among those moved last fall from Toronto and York.

FRIEND GAVE HIM LIQUOR ON SEVERAL OCCASIONS

"How Some Blacklisters Get Refreshments," with four of a cast, was put on at the police court this morning, and the audience heard some new ones.

His Worship Magistrate Dumble, County Crown Attorney Wood, Chief Thompson, and a blacklister held down the boards, with his Worship and the prohibited one taking the heavy parts.

Chief Thompson took the receipts, which were $10.00.

The "lister" was spotted last Sunday with a burdensome jag, and the chief billed the "question box" for this morning.

After acknowledging that he "fell down" the spot light was turned on the principal, and by way of response he explained all the details of a certain outing on the banks of the Otonabee and in the vicinity of the old Bridge Works.

While walking south on George street, and near the C.P.R. station, he said, he met an acquaintance. Both walked on for some distance, and suddenly the newcomer turned around and left him to meet another man, also coming down, and about half a block distant. He waited until both men caught up to him, and when all three met his friend said something about the newcomer "having something on his hip." Nothing further was said and the party wended their way to the river bank. Acquaintance number two, pulled out a large bottle and all three drank, and then took several more.

He couldn't remember which took the first drink or whether the usual "here's to you" formed a part of the ceremony.

Asked if friend number one had given him liquor on previous occasions he replied that during the month of July he had.

HAD NOT READ OF HIS DEATH

Mrs. Sara Donnelly wrote the town clerk a somewhat pathetic letter asking for information concerning the whereabouts of her nephew, William Fowler. The last she heard of him was in the spring when he was working at Victoria Harbor and left there for Orillia. She was getting anxious about him, she said. Fowler was the man who was killed at Atherley a couple of months ago. His aunt had not read the papers.—Orillia News-Letter.

Hard Luck

He was a traveller, and he had apparently only one "pair of pants." He was staying at a local hotel on Charlotte street. He requested the bell boy to take them to a place of "cleaning and pressing." This was done at a late hour, but unfortunately for the transient (tanned and brown) the "goods" were not delivered until a late hour this morning. He had to lay in bed, locked up. Hard luck.

A Pleasant Trip

Mr. and Mrs. Felix Brownscombe and family, who are spending the summer at their cottage at Stony Lake, have just returned from a trip through the canal to Lake Simcoe, travelling by their launch "Minto." They spent six days on the trip and report having had a most enjoyable time, spending two days in Beaverton. Mr. Brownscombe gives great credit to Mr. McClellan, superintendent of the canal, for the splendid manner in which the boat channel is buoyed, and says that any of the launch owners from here need have no fear as to their finding the way. As the trip is an exceedingly pleasant one, and as good sleeping accommodation can be had all along the route, Mr. Brownscombe is surprised that more people do not spend at least a part of their summer holidays seeing the beautiful scenery all along the upper stretched of the canal.

It has been announced at Washington that the public domain of the United States now included about 731,000,000 acres.

FIRST VISIT TO PETERBORO IN 56 YEARS

A particularly interesting visitor was in the city yesterday in the person of Mr. Richard Anderson, of Wingham, Ont.

Mr. Anderson is seventy-one years of age, and was born in Keene, and yesterday was the first time in fifty six years that he had visited Peterborough. He is a retired farmer, and for the past few months has been travelling over Ontario and Quebec on pleasure bent.

He retains his youthful appearance and vigor to a remarkable degree, and would easily pass for being twenty years younger than he is. In company with a couple of friends of his boyhood, Mr. Anderson intends renewing old acquaintances in Keene.

He was much impressed by the appearance of Peterborough as it is today, and very few places were familiar to him. In referring to the rapid growth, Mr. Anderson stated that Berlin and Peterborough were the two most progressive cities in Ontario, in his estimation.

COBOURG VS. T.A.S. FOR THE FANS ON THE HOLIDAY

The main attraction here on Monday, and in fact the only one for those who will stay in town that day, will be the ball game at Riverside Park between Cobourg and the champion T.A.S. team, starting at 3 p.m. It will be remembered that this same Cobourg team gave the T.A.S. boys one of the hardest battles they have had this year on May 24th, when the score was 3 to 1 in favor of the home team, and when they were asked to play here Monday they eagerly consented, glad of a chance to wipe out that defeat. The Cobourg team claims it was their first defeat out of town in two years, and they are betting that Monday's game will not be another. The fans are assured of a rattling good contest as the T.A.S. team is in the best possible shape just at present, judging from last Saturday's win from the West Ends. The admission will be twenty-five cents for gents and fifteen cents for ladies, and no doubt, with fine weather a large crowd will turn out and witness the fray. It will be some game.

BRIEF AND BREEZY

James J. Jeffries denies that he was drugged or had said he was drugged at Reno on July 4, when he was defeated for the world's heavy-weight championship.

First Baseman Hal Chase and Pitcher Jim Vaughan had a narrow escape from death in a train wreck last week. The players were aboard a limited New York Central express that ran down a stalled engine fourteen miles east of Utica.

Vaughan was hurled against the end of his berth so violently that his neck and right leg were severely injured. Chase was thrown out into the aisle among the passengers.

Frank Gotch, the world's champion mat artist, might help to draw the crowd, in the event of a fight between Jack Johnson and himself, but it would be hardly necessary for any of the fans to take a lunch with them.

Wolgast and McFarland are to meet at Milwaukee on Labor Day in a ten round bout. If neither is dopped and both are able to come back, the scrap should be interesting.

Messrs. Tom Longboat and Sol Mintz will do the fall fairs this season. In the meantime the red man can take a fall off the moist wagon and get oiled up.

Miss May Sutton, the world's champion tennis player, is going in for something heavier. She has decided to organize a cricket team to play against eleven of the sterner sex.

Wyatt Lee pitched both games for Newark yesterday and at that almost got away with both contests. The first game went to the Indians by 1-0, and the Hustlers took the second by the same score.

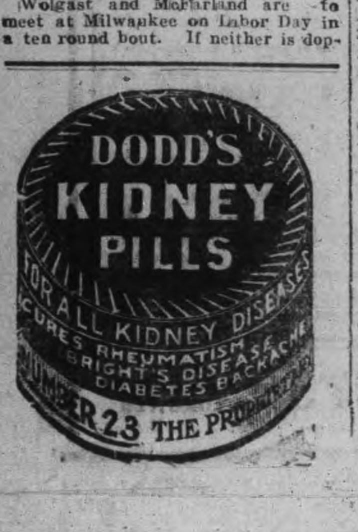
Montreal added another and drove three Providence pitchers to cover. The Royals clouted out fifteen hits and sent a baker's dozen across the plate.

Yesterday's part of the story of the fight for the batting honors of the American League is that Speaker had four hits, Lajoie had one and Cobb did not play.

Triples by Clancy and Frick won the day for Baltimore. The game went twelve innings. The bases were filled when Clancy annexed and one runner was on first when Frick banged.

SIXTH OUTING OF THE STRATHS

Messrs. Herb. McMillan, Pete Weatherson and Clarence Wilson left this morning with the "Molly-Maye" for Bobcaygeon, where they will be joined this evening by "Bab" Kendrey and Chas. Curtis. The occasion is the annual camp at "Suicide Point" of the big five and the only rule which will be rigidly enforced this, the sixth outing, will be a short haircut, with "Muggie" McMillan on the end of the horse clippers.



GOLF

All members of the Golf club are asked to be at the club house Monday, Civic Holiday, when the president and captain's teams will play for prizes.

BIG REGATTA.

Havelock, Aug. 5.—The regatta at Trent Bridge on Wednesday was a very successful event, and the committee of management are to be congratulated on the success of the first regatta ever held at Trent Bridge. There was a large attendance from all the surrounding country, and the canoe and skiff races and other events that were run off were very keenly contested. The bridge that spans the river and the many beautiful cottages up and down stream were handsomely decorated for the occasion. Many of the launches were also prettily adorned and everything else took on a holiday appearance. At six o'clock the immense crowd gathered on the bridge and from this point witnessed the interesting events. Immediately after the races a brilliant display of fire works was given. A dancing pavilion was erected in the grove, to the south of the bridge, and it was prettily illuminated, excellent music having been provided by a pianist from Toronto.

Rev. R. J. Elliott, an old Havelock boy, now pastor of St. Paul's M. E. Church, Manchester, N.H., will deliver his popular lecture "My Trip Around the World" in the Methodist church, on Monday evening next.

Mr. Jno. Beaver has transferred his pool tables to the addition recently built to his barber shop.

The regular August quarterly meeting of the Methodist church will be held on Sunday. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered at 8 p.m. The business meeting will be held on Monday.

London, Aug. 6.—Heniker Heaton urges the appointment of an Imperial and foreign postmaster, whose first duty should be to convene a meeting of European postmaster-generals with a view of abolishing political frontiers for postal, telegraph and wireless communications between countries.

Strathcona Wins Shield.

Ottawa, Aug. 6.—The first winner of the Earl Grey challenge shield is the town of Strathcona, Alberta. The conditions of competition were that the shield was to go to the town or city in Canada which had the largest number of cadets in proportion to its population. The population was figured from January 1, 1910, and the number of cadets from the actual strength of the corps on May 24 last. Strathcona has a population of five thousand and has 150 cadets. The second place goes to a county in Quebec. Towns of less than 5,000 are not considered, but must include the surrounding country in the contest.

It is quite a coincidence that the first winner of this prize should be the town which bears the name of the man who has done so much for the cadet movement in this country.

BROKEN HEALTH BRINGS WRINKLES

How All Women Can Preserve Good Health and Good Looks

Too many women and girls look old long before they should. In nine cases out of ten it is a matter of health. Work, worry, confinement indoors and lack of exercise cause the health to run down. Then faces become thin and pale; lines and wrinkles appear, there are headaches, backaches and a constant feeling of tiredness.

Women and girls who feel well look well. Therefore improve your health and you will look better. It is a fact that thousands of Canadian women and girls owe the robust health they enjoy to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They feel well and enjoy life as only a healthy person can.

The simple reason for this is that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make new, rich, red blood, which strengthens all the vital organs, brings brightness to the eye, a glow of health to every part of the body. Mrs. Warren Wright, Una, Sask., says:—"I feel that I owe a debt of gratitude to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills that nothing I can say in their favor will repay. I was so reduced in health and strength that I was hardly able to walk at all, and could do no work whatever. My blood was so thin and watery that my lips and finger tips resembled those of a corpse. I had almost constant headaches, and the smallest exertion would set my heart palpitating violently, and often I would drop in a faint. Nothing I did seemed to help me in the least, and I felt so far gone that I never expected to recover my health. I was in this critical condition when I read in a newspaper of a cure in a case like mine through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I decided to try them. I got a half dozen boxes and before I used them all there was a great change in my condition. My appetite returned, the color began to come back to my lips and face, and my strength was increasing. I continued the use of the Pills for some time longer and they restored me to the pink of perfect health. While using the Pills I gained twenty pounds in weight. My cure was made in the summer of 1909, and I am now enjoying better health than ever before."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will do for other weak and worn women just what they did for Mrs. Wright, if they are given a fair trial. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

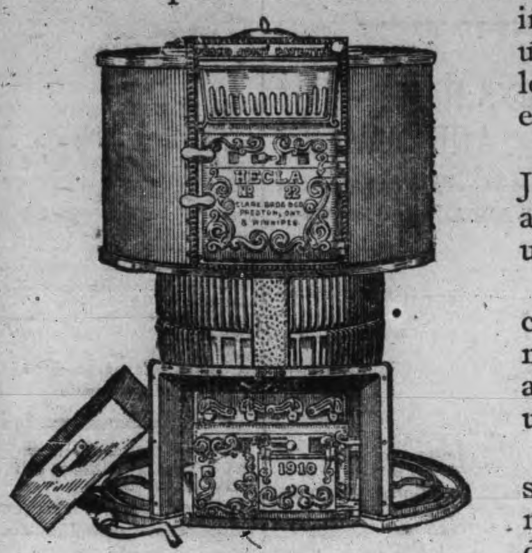
If a cloth be dipped in hot water and then in bran it will clean white paint without injuring it.

HECLA FURNACE

And The Most Vital Improvements Made In Warm Air Heating In 30 Years

The first vital improvement is the FUSED JOINTS.

The objection to the ordinary warm air furnace is, that where the steel and cast iron parts are bolted and cemented, the joints do not remain air-tight. The iron and steel of the furnace expand and contract under the influence of heat and cold. Bolts work loose, cement drops out and gas, dust and smoke escape into the house through these openings.



To overcome this, we perfected FUSED JOINTS. Instead of bolting and cementing iron and steel together, we fuse them at white heat until they become one solid piece of metal.

FUSED JOINTS make the combustion chamber absolutely air-tight. They are permanent joints and insure the warm, heated air being always fresh, healthful, invigorating and untainted.

HECLA FIREPOTS are reinforced by 97 steel ribs fused into the outer surface. This makes them the stiffest, strongest and most durable firepots that can be made.

The steel ribs increase the radiating surface of the firepot by 300%. This increase in the radiating surface of the firepot, increases the radiating power of your furnace and enables you to get more heat out of the fuel that you burn.

In fact, actual tests has shown a saving of at least one ton of coal in seven, through the heating efficiency of the "Hecla" Steel Ribbed Firepot.

These are vital improvements—"Hecla" improvements—that are found only in "Hecla" Furnaces. There are others, described and illustrated in our book. Write for free copy. Send us a rough plan of your house and we shall be pleased to make up free estimate of the cost of installing the proper "Hecla" Furnace. 99

Got Off Easily.

Belleville, Aug. 6.—E. V. Charbomean of Brockville, who was arrested in Brockville and brought here, charged with interfering with a G.T.R. employe in the discharge of his duties, was tried by Magistrate Masson yesterday afternoon and found guilty. As the strike was over and Charbomean had been heavily fined in Brockville, and as the only thing proved against him was that he had urged a strike-breaker conductor not to go on a train, the magistrate let him go on payment of costs.

Train Ran Away.

Stroudsburg, Pa., Aug. 6.—A freight wreck, in which two men met death and two others were badly injured, occurred at Analomink, on the Lackawanna Railroad, about four miles north of this city yesterday.

The cause of the wreck was the running away of the train, composed of 62 loaded cars, on the Pocono Mountains, the steepest grade on the road. The air on the engine gave out and the engineer could not hold the train.

Subsidy Not Renewed.

Kingston, Jamaica, Aug. 6.—The abandonment of the efforts for a renewal of the steamship subsidy between Great Britain and Jamaica have been announced, neither the home nor colonial Government being prepared to renew it on the present basis and the shipping companies decline to accept less than $200,000 a year. It is believed that Jamaica will endeavor to arrange a new fast service in conjunction with Canada.

Discovery Caused Stampede.

Winnipeg, Aug. 6.—A number of enquiries by wire from points in Ontario, Quebec and New England States have been received in Winnipeg as to the correctness of the reported gold discovery north of Hudson Bay Junction.

All information is based upon the statement of A. Vagatsond, a Cree Indian, whose unreliability is proverbial. At the Junction his report is regarded as reliable, and practically every male resident of the Junction has gone out to the scene of the alleged discovery to stake claims, and the town is deserted, except by women and children. It is claimed that samples of almost pure gold have been brought into the town.

Chained to the Wall.

Chicago, Aug. 6.—Humane agents, acting on an anonymous communication from neighbors, forced their way into a dark room in the home of Hugo Lang, and found a six-year-old boy, trembling and emaciated, locked to the wall with a heavy chain. The parents were arrested.

Neighbors assert that the boy had been punished so much that he crawls on all fours to his parents when they call, and that he has spent a large part of his life chained to the wall in the dark room.

All members of the Golf club are asekd to be at the club house Monday, Civic holiday, when the president and captain's teams will play for prizes.

THE WET WEATHER AND MUDDY ROADS MADE MARKET SMALL

Few and far between were the carts on the market square to-day. The rain had a mighty influence in keeping them all away. But the grub on those carts looked healthy, and quality rather than quantity was the order of the day.

Potatoes were selling like hot cakes at 30 cents a peck. Green apples looked very tempting at 20 cents a peck. And then came beets and cabbages. 5 to 15 cents were they. For butter that was nice and golden you had 25 cents to pay.

Eggs were twenty-one cents, Gooseberries 10 cents a peck. Black currents were 5 cents higher and juicy chickens brought 75 cents.

The noisy little piglets were seven dollars a piece.

Hay was conspicuous by its absence.

FIRED THE DRUNKEN CREW

London, Aug 4.—Probably the most sensational episode in connection with the recent Grand Trunk strike was enacted at London station last night, when No. 5, the Pacific Express, from Suspension Bridge, drew up to the platform and Conductor Hughson and Brkaman Willisley and Turleston, all American strike-breakers, were dismissed by Supt. Bowker, charged with being intoxicated.

A passenger hastened from the train and informed the officials at the station that the whole train crew "did not know what they were doing."

"We have all been holding our breath all the way from Ingersoll," he said, "for fear something serious might happen. We have trusted to the men on the engine."

Another passenger hastened up and said: "It is high time this thing was stopped."

Then and there, and without further ceremony, that train crew were ordered off, and when Supt. Bowker came in on No. 15 some time later, he told the Americans that their services were no longer required.

How to get rid of them bothered the official, and it was decided to send them back to Sarnia on No. 5. The plan was abandoned later, however, and the men were locked up in the "snake" room for the night. In the meantime Conductor Douglas, who came in on No. 39, was sent out on No. 5. Higgins took out No. 15.

Willisley comes from Boston and could hardly stand up, and when cautioned to keep himself together on the platform, insisted on making frequent visits to the bar. The men will probably be sent home to-day.

CANADIAN LINER SUNK IN PACIFIC

Peterborough Lady Among Those Aboard—All Were Saved

Early this morning a telegram from Prince Rupert brought the intelligence to Mr. F. H. Dobbin of the wreck of the C.P.R. liner "Princess May," off the coast of Alaska, and on which steamer Miss Wynnie Dobbin. Miss Dobbin was making the Alaskan trip of the C.P.R. steamers between Vancouver, Skagway and Nome, sailing along the western coast of the continent northward. The vessel was on the return trip, and the disaster overtook the passengers and ship's company about two o'clock on Friday morning, 5th inst.

Barely giving the wireless operator time to flash a message summoning assistance, the "Princess May" went to the bottom, consequent on her having run on a reef at Sentinel Island during a dense fog, making a big hole in her hull. Not a life was lost, thanks to the coolness and bravery of the officers, but the escape from a terrible disaster was a narrow one, as the vessel filled very rapidly.

UNABLE TO LAND.

The wireless station at Juneau got the May's message, and soon every steam craft in the harbor was hurrying to her assistance, sixty miles down the canal. The passengers, in the ship's boats, found it impossible to make a landing on the precipitous cliffs along the canal, and with the coming of daylight decided to await the assistance which they knew to be forthcoming. Owing to the hurried manner in which they left the ship the women and children were scantly clad and suffered from the cold of the early morning hours. Steamers reached them last evening from Juneau, where all were taken and comfortably housed.

Despite its many intercity tunnels and bridges, New York still keeps 130 ferry boats busy.

IF YOU WANT TO FIGHT IT OUT

From the age of 45 years the eyes have undergone a natural change (which no eye escapes), so that they are either out of focus for distance or near vision, especially at night. You cannot see distinctly with the paper a foot from the eyes and you need strong light. Your real need is suitable glasses. If you want to fight this difficulty out with nature you may do so, millions have done it before you and have been worsted in the fight. We are relieving the eyes of such cases every day. Perhaps you will be wise by taking the matter in time.

EXPLOSION ON LAUNCH

Three Girls and Two Men in Pleasure Craft Have Thrilling Time at Port Dover.

Port Dover, Aug. 9.—While about half a mile from the harbor here yesterday evening an explosion occurred on the gasoline launch May, on board which were three young girls and two men out for a pleasure cruise. The launch was owned by Jake Eyres and was being run by his son, assisted by a sailor, Dan Sinclair, from the cruiser Vigilant. The explosion was caused by the pipe leading from the tank to the engine being detached Almost in an instant twenty gallons of gasoline flooded underneath the flooring of the boat and took fire. With praiseworthy presence of mind the Vigilant sailor grabbed the girls while the flames raged all around him and held them overboard in the water until help arrived. It is little short of a miracle that no lives were lost. Eyres was badly burned. The hull, while still aflame, was towed to the harbor by another launch. The pumps of the Vigilant were used with all possible pressure to extinguish the flames, but the craft was not saved above the water line. The girls were spending their vacation here, their homes being in Hamilton. They were Misses Miller, Allan and Kidner.

PERMANENT HEADQUARTERS

Minneapolis, Aug. 9.—Secretary-Treasurer John W. Hayes of the International Typographical Union, read his annual report yesterday, showing the organization to be in a flourishing condition. The borrowing of a large sum from the old-age pension reserve is suggested in a report of the international executive council. The proposed loan would be used to secure a site, and erect a suitable headquarters building in Indianapolis, with the idea of making Indianapolis the permanent convention place of the union.

RIPPED OPEN WITH A CARVING KNIFE

Buffalo, Aug. 9.—Returning unexpectedly and finding another man in his home in the company of his wife, John Tiehli, aged 30, is said by the police of Lackawanna City to have ripped Alexander Tionduski, 25, from head to foot with a large carving knife, and then hurled his victim out of a second storey window. Tionduski was taken to the Mercy Hospital, where yesterday morning he was reported in a dying condition.

Not Really Reformed.

Guelph, Aug. 9.—Michael Stockwell was released on Saturday morning from the reformatory farm, being given a ticket to his home in Smith's Falls. He came up the York road to go to the station, and dropped into the house of Reuben Foran, where he stole a watch and some clothes. He was caught, and yesterday morning was sentenced to three months in the Central Prison.

THE OLD "CON" GAME REAPPEARS

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Once more the ancient game of the dropped hundred dollar bill was worked by a short young man of 22 years of age, dressed in a blue suit and wearing a straw hat, at the Union Station Sunday morning. Yesterday the victim complained to the police and turned in the bill, a valueless Confederate $100 bill. The police are looking for the shaper.

The young man and the other reached for the bill, which lay on the station waiting-room floor. They reached simultaneously, but the "mark" landed the property. The other put a proposition to share up, and the mark gave over $20 and kept the bill. He was to give $35 more yesterday, but the young man did not turn up.

Last week, in West Queen street, $20 was got by a man answering the same description, who sought change for two tens and gave the bogus hundred to another apparently in mistake.

THE PREMIER AT EDMONTON

Edmonton, Aug. 9—Notwithstanding all other demonstrations of welcome Sir Wilfrid Laurier's greeting here was the best of his tour. Practically the whole city turned out. Thousands of people thronged the depot and had to be controlled by police lines. Several bands were in attendance, and a procession of some length was formed. The streets along the line of march were thronged, the crowds being several lines deep. Cheer after cheer greeted Sir Wilfrid's appearance. Owing to the heavy day, no reception was held, and Sir Wilfrid retired early.

In addition to the itinerary arrangements, the Premier stopped for an hour at Mundare, a Ruthenian settlement, to lay the corne-stone of a new Greek Catholic Church.

Sir Wilfrid's remarks were brief, and he only took time to proclaim that Canada welcomed people of all races and creeds, giving them the right to worship the way they pleased.

BRUCHESI SAID TO BE SLATED FOR THE NEXT CARDINALSHIP

Gossip in Roman Catholic Circles Has it That Archibishop Will be Raised to the College in Order That Canada May Again Have a Cardinal.

New York, Aug. 9.—Private advices have been received in this country and confirmed by the Rome correspondents of the higher class of Catholic journals, to the effect that Pope Pius X. has intimated that the long heralded consistory will be held next November. It is of particular interest to Canada, for although it may happen that no American prelate will be raised to the senate of the church, it seems a certainty that the apostolic delegate at Washington, Mgr. Falconi, will be among the new cardinals. In fact, this is openly stated by well-informed correspondents of Catholic papers in England and America. Mgr. Agius, now in the Philippines, is to succeed him at Washington. The monsignor, who is a learned member of the Benedictine Order, has almost finished the laborious work undertaken five years ago.

The Archbishop of Montreal, Mgr. Bruchesi, is likely to be named, as Canada has had no representative in the College of Cardinals since the demise of Cardinal Taschereau.

Some intimate that the papal legate, Cardinal Vannutelli, may be the bearer of a private communication on this subject to Mgr. Bruchesi, and that it will be made known at the close of the congress. At all events the Pope has been at pains recently to show his fondness for the Archbishop of Montreal. At the latter's request he made M. Lewoyne Demartingy, a Canadian, a papal chamberlain and ordered him to be attached to the escort of the cardinal legate. M. Demartigny and Thomas Hughes Kelly of this city will be the lay members of the papal legation. There is not the least hint of another American being in the list of coming cardinals. This is variously computed at 10 and 12. It is taken for granted that the Nuncio at Vienna, Mgr. Granito Belmonte, and the Patriarch at Lisbon, Mgr. Mendez Bello, will be among the fortunate ones.

In the case of Mgr. Belmonte, the Pope, it is understood, is quite willing to give him the hat, but the Emperor Francis Joseph seems to be in the way. Austria still holds a tight rein on her ancient prerogative of suggesting this one or that one for special honors. Rome usually looks favorably upon these requests, though the sacred college did object when that country ventured to use the power of veto at the conclave which elected Pius X. The Nuncio at Vienna offended the Prime Minister, Count Achrenthal, by his condemnation of Prof. Wahrmund, and since that incident Austria has shown no disposition to take the initiative in the matter of getting him the coveted honor. Mgr. Bislei, the Pope's major-domo; Mgr. Lugari, assessor of the holy office, and Mgr. Della Chiesa, Archbishop of Bologna, are among those mentioned by persons close to the Vatican. Again, too, the name of the Archbishop of Westminster is brought forward, Mgr. Bourne. England has been patiently waiting for some recognition.

May Be General Strike.

Paris, Aug. 9.—A proposal for a general strike was passed unanimously at a meeting of railroad men at Toulouse on Sunday. Immediate action was decided on, if the employers fail to make the concessions demanded. At Bordeaux the railroad men decided also on a general strike and expressed their intention of fighting to the bitter end.

A Cowardly Act.

Brockville, Aug. 9.—A most cowardly and inhuman act was perpetuated upon a cow belonging to George Smith of Smith's Falls. Upon going to the pasture, he found the animal dead, it having been disembowled on the under side of the body from the udder towards the front. The work showed that a very sharp knife had been used.

U. S. Army 87,000 Strong.

Washington, Aug. 9.—The enlisted strength of the army during the present fiscal year has been fixed approximately at 87,000 men, under the arrangement of the estimates by Major-Gen. Leonard Wood, chief of staff, and approved by President Taft.

Both Legs Severed.

Belleville, Aug. 9.—John Brown, 19 years old, tried to board a freight train while it was in motion, when he slipped and fell under the wheels. An arm and both legs were cut off and he died shortly after.

THOS. REES HAD NARROW ESCAPE

St. Catharines, Aug. 9.—Thomas Rees is the hero of a narrow escape from electrocution. He was engaged in emptying oil from a tank car on the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway. To see how much oil remained in the tank, he called for an iron rod. Standing on top of the tank, he raised the rod to thrust it down into the tank. The rod came in contact with a trolley wire and there was a blaze around the tank.

The rod was wrested from Rees' hand and thrown several feet to one side, striking a colored man named Allegood, burning a hole in his clothing and inflicting a severe burn on his thigh. The hose used for drawing off oil from the tank was burned. Mr. Rees was not thrown from the top of the tank, and only felt a slight shock as the electricity passed from the rod to the tank.

SAME RIGHTS AS THE FRENCH

The Hague, Aug. 9.—Yesterday Senator Root contended that the fishing rights of the Treaty of 1818 were not simply those of equality, but that the makers of the treaty understood it in accordance with the American contention, and they had no idea whatever that the grant which they were making was to be subject to any power or authority of Great Britain to restrict, limit, modify, or affect it by subsequent legislation.

He contended that the French had exercised these fishing rights on part of these coasts under an earlier treaty wth Great Britain without being subject to local regulations, and American rights in the same terms were in effect the same rights, and were understood to be the same before lawyers began to argue and try to find some distinction between the two.

SUSPECTED OF INFANTICIDE

Huntsville, Aug. 9.—The fully developed though badly decomposed remains of an infant were found by workmen at the rear of the Kent House on Saturday, and the circumstances warranted Crown Attorney Johnson in calling for a coroner's inquest. This was held during the forenoon by Coroner McGibbon of Bracebridge, who was assisted by the crown attorney.

The evidence of Mrs. Roy, cook at the Kent House, and Proprietor Davis pointed suspiciously to a former employe of the house.

Following the verdict of the coroner's jury, a woman named Reynolds was arrested by Chief Watson during the afternoon and was later remanded until Wednesday.

Fatally Scalded.

New York, Aug. 9.—Two men were dreadfully scalded, one fatally, and thirty families were panic-stricken yesterday when a 400-gallon tank of hot water in an eight-inch wall blew up in the air shaft of the six-storey building at the corner of Broome and Clinton streets.

Ottawa, Aug. 9.—Two hundred and fifty delegates will be here to-day from all over Canada to attend the Sons of England convention. The general purpose committee, with E. A. Miller of Aylmer, Ont., in the chair, is arranging the business of the convention.

THRILLING DIVE OF AN AVIATOR

Blackpool, Eng., Aug. 9.—A. V. Roes, a newcomer in the field of English aviation, is not daunted yesterday after his thrilling experience on the local aviation field last evening, when his triplane, a machine of his own design, caught fire while he was flying at a great height. Roes pointed his machine to the earth and at a speed that threatened every moment to overturn the aeroplane he reached the ground just before the machine collapsed. The planes were completely burned away, and had the aviator been fifty feet higher when the flames broke out he would probably have been dashed to death.

LAD STRUCK BY TRAIN AND KILLED

Galt, Aug. 9.—Three young boys about ten years of age, while playing on the Grand Trunk tracks here yesterday, were run down by a passenger train at the subway, where the C.P.R. crosses the G.T.R. Willie Cox, nine years old, was instantly killed; Victor Lesmer sustained an injured leg, while the other lad escaped unharmed.

Mrs. Walter Smith, wife of a prosperous farmer of Sheffield, was instantly killed while attempting to drive a team of horses attached to a load of grain. The horses became unmanageable. Mrs. Smith jumped, and when picked up was dead.

CONFLICTING REPORTS OF WHEAT CROP BY EXPERTS

Pessimists Put it as Low as 65,000,000 Bushels and Optimists as High as 100,000,000 Bushels—Eighty to Eighty-Five Millions is Average Guess.

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Opinions have always differed and opinions of those interested in the western wheat crop are no exception. Some estimate the yield at 65,000,000 bushels, and others at $100,000,000. Both are thought to be extremists. Others, who may turn out to be nearer right, guess between 80,000,000 and 85,000,000.

It was civic holiday yesterday in Winnipeg and the grain market was closed, but on the curb market, October wheat dropped from $1.04 at the opening to $1.03 5-8 at the close.

On the Chicago market, spring wheat rose from $1.08 5-8 to $1.09 1-4; September fell from $1.02 to $1.01 1-2; May oats rose from 40 3-4c. to 40 7-8c.; and September oats remained steady around 36 1-2c.

The following is a summary of the reports received to date by the Canadian Bank of Commerce from its western correspondents.

Portage la Prairie—Prospects for a fair crop are considerably lessened by the continued drought. Wheat will average 10 to 12 bushels to the acre.

Brandon—The crop to the north and southwest will hardly be worth cutting. Fall wheat will average seven bushels. The spring crop is a total failure.

Regina—The summer fallow crop appears to be in excellent condition.

Moose Jaw—Good prospects of an early harvest. There will be a total failure in many cases. Had the farmers been a little more careful, they would have had a better showing.

Southern Alberta—About one-third of a crop is expected. At Treherne there will be 13 bushels to the acre.

Northern Manitoba—Conditions are splendid; one sees no poor crops. Nothing can do any harm now but hail, rust or frost.

From another very trustworthy source much brighter reports have been received. From Brandon, Varcoe, Toulon, Souris and Yorkton comes the news that heavy falls of rain have worked wonders. All danger is over, and 15 bushels an acre may be expected.

At Lenore conditions are fair, but at Clearwater, Lyttleton and Mowbray, much damage has been done by hot winds. At Moose Jaw and Swift Current, the general conditions are favorable, and Medicine Hat expects a half crop.

Lethbridge and Calgary report gloomy prospects. Edmonton has good conditions and Wetaskiwin says "Never better."

At MacLeod conditions are variable. In some parts one-third of a crop is expected; in others, only ten per cent.

At Crow's Nest it has been hot and dry, and the spring crop is poor, but fall wheat will average 20 bushels an acre.

WOULD KILL MAYOR GAYNOR

Special to the Review.

New York, Aug. 9.—Mayor William J. Gaynor, of New York city, was shot and probably fatally wounded this morning on board the steamer Kaiser Wilhelmeder Grosse, as he was sailing for Europe. His assailant was arrested. The man gave his name as Jules James Galagher, 449 Third avenue, New York city. Shortly after 11 o'clock the following was given out by the steamer's physician, who attended Gaynor:—"Bullet entered Mayor's neck back of ear burying itself in region mastoid bone, as far as observation goes, in our opinion injury not serious."

THE REASON

Special to the Review.

Hoboken, N.J., Aug. 9.—"Big Billy" Edwards, New York State Commissioner, was also shot by the man who seriously wounded Mayor Gaynor today. He was wounded in the left arm, but the injury is slight. The would-be assassin also fired at Robt. Adamson, the mayor's secretary. Mayor Gaynor is conscious and is now resting quietly. He seems to be in no immediate danger. Gallagher admits the shooting and says he did it because he was discharged a short time ago from his position as Watchman in the employ of the department of docks and ferries.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

ONE TRULY BLUEBEARD

New York, Aug. 9.—There is on exhibit at the federal detention station one truly Bluebeard, nationality Russian, 70 years, beard long, curly, and a bright, bright blue.

Morris Lubowsky heard on his trip across the ocean that it was difficult for the aged and infirm to get into this land of the free, so, when he was turned aside at Ellis Island to await the action of a board of special enquiry, he brewed a dark dye from the lead of an indelible pencil and soaked his beard in it. The next application was intended for the hairs of his head, but when the dye was well set, he discovered too late that it was blue, not black, and quite as indelible as it had been advertised.

With a snow white head and an imposing ultra-marine beard, the disconsolate Lubowsky presents a strange picture of woe. He will probably be deported.

July 28 the Japanese forces captured Shinarek, the mountain objective, where it was planned to place artillery dominating the rebel position. The Japanese were driven back twice.

On one occasion the Formosans lay hidden in tall grass until the Japanese were within ten yards and then poured in a disastrous fire. The Japanese shortly afterwards took advantage of a storm from which the headhunters took shelter. The advance resulted in the capture of several strong positions.

GOOD-DAY

THERE IS NOTHING NEW IN THE GARBAGE QUESTION. ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND MAGGOTS WERE BORN ON THE HOLIDAY.

A FIEND

There is a devil in man's clothes somewhere around Smith's Falls. A few nights ago he disemboweled a cow belonging to a C.P.R. brakeman. Such a man should be flogged. There are devils in Peterborough. They use the tongue—that two-edged sword. Did she err? Did he make a mistake? Their daggers are ever working.

A SUGGESTION

A suggestion is made to the Review that the librarian for the new library should visit large libraries in other cities to see how they are conducted before he assumes the active duties in connection with his office here. The suggestion appears to be an excellent one, and it would seem that the library board would be well advised in taking it up.

MR. BELL'S RETIREMENT

Mr. Bell's retiremennt

The department has, with great regret, felt compelled to ask for the resignation of Mr. F. J. Bell, the highly-esteemed division court clerk. It is a matter of general regret that Mr. Bell's health has been such as to render the government unable to hold him responsible for his office. While his office has in every particular been managed with care and satisfaction in the past, it is no longer possible, as his family thoroughly recognized, to keep him in an office which it would be unfair to hold him responsible for. We regret that the Examiner has seen fit to try to make capital out of a case of sheer and much-to-be-regretted necessity.

LAURIER'S FREE TRADE

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has been telling the farmers of the west how firm a free trader he is. That is the sort of talk which he used in great profusion before 1896, when the Liberal party was out of power. The line which he took was to talk free trade in public and seek to convince all the low tariff elements that he was a convinced free trader; then, just before the election to assure the manufacturers that they had nothing to fear should the Liberal party come into power. The word could fly about through a small number of manufacturers almost at once, while the change of front would not be grasped by the great masses of persons to whom he had avowed his free trade ideals. The election took place on June 23rd. On June 2nd, just three weeks before it, Mr. Laurier as he then was, addressed a letter to Mr. George H. Bertram, of Toronto, designed to placate the manufacturers. Here are some sentences from it:

"The intention of the Liberal party is not and never was to establish absolute free trade in this country."

"The question was discussed at Ottawa, but, after anxious consideration, while fully recognizing the superiority of the British system of freedom of trade as an abstract principle, the convention came to the conclusion that, under the existing conditions of our country, the fiscal policy best adapted to its requirements, its economic situation, its enormous financial obligations, is a revenue tariff."

"I submit also that, apart from the community as a whole, the manufacturers have not only nothing to suffer but much to gain from the substitution of a revenue tariff for the present system."

"Moreover, I think I can confidently appeal to the experience of the business community that, with exception of monopolies and combines, all manufacturers interest would welcome a change of policy on the lines I have indicated."

"That, then, was Sir Wilfrid Laurier's policy when in opposition and looking for power. A loud preaching of "free trade as it is in England," to catch the attention of the general community; a quiet tip to the manufacturers just before election day that he would be even more favorable to them than the Conservatives had been. By that means he conciliated a good many manufacturers. He got in. What Happened?"

"In brief he kept the National Policy. As time went on did he seal down the duties in his gradual march towards free trade? His first tariff was made in 1897. In 1897, the tariff then being ten years old, he revised it. downwards? Again—let us see. Here a few general classes of manufactures;

Iron and steel manufacturers, old tariff, 24 per cent; new tariff 24.6 per cent; rate of increase, 2.2 per cent.

Earthenware and chinaware, old tariff, 30 per cent; new tariff, 30 per cent.

Woollen goods, old tariff, 34.5 per cent; new tariff 34.5 per cent.

Flax, hemp and jute manufacturers, old tariff, 27.4 per cent; new tariff, 29.1 per cent; rate of increase, 6.2 per cent.

AUGUST

So let us grow as in the spring.

The days are growing longer. Each morning the sun comes up smiling to greet us just a little earlier. Each morning the sap mounts just a little higher, each morning you and I are just a little older. So let us grow.

This life is a mysterious treasure, We come into the world naked, we leave it naked, save the cerements of death, naked and alone.

Ah! what we are, and what we would like to be; how different.

We would be as the gods and ride amid the stars and live in the glories of the heavens. But no, some power holds us, and we are here to march to the world's grim music, to face the dark days and the bright, to combat and win or be trodden under foot, to help or to hinder, to be a coward or brave.

Let us grow.

May we be indifferent to the hell of avarice. Yes, we need money; but that grind, that grasp and greed; we may never take it with us; not one five cent piece. We but leave it for the heirs to rejoice over, to rejoice, to spend and forget.

Let us grow.

Life is beautiful. Ah, but you are poor. Friend, so are we. We read of the great palaces of earth; but they are not for us. We read of the magnificent festivities, the thousand guests, but this is not for us; nor are the titles ours, the banquets and the tide or honor. No, not for you or me. We are the common people, thank God we are, ours the "common round, the trivial task."

Let them have their palaces, we do not envy them their palaces; what more of love and joy have they. Our children around us, our few friends near us; let them have it all; let them have their great festivities, our joys are honest earned. There sits no coach man at the door, no liveried servant in the portal. They who gather at our tables are brothers all. We want no titles, the grave does not miss the crown, titles are empty when death comes riding, banquets and tides of honor are hollow in the inevitable hours. We do not ask for these.

We are poor, yes, perhaps; but, say, we share the glories of the night with yonder George upon the throne of all the British Empire. He sees the constellations if he may but get away from those lesser lights about him Does the evening star do him more obeisance than to you or me? Does the milky way disclose its secret, or does Mars come low and whisper; is the solitude more communicative. No, my friend, George and his pomp are likewise feeble. And what of the majesty of the sun; has he one ray for rank and a lesser one for poverty, for us common ones. No, he shines for us all. The great mountains rear their heads, the rivers, the seas and inland waters, all serve you, all serve me even as the greatest ones.

Our homes are not magnificant with oils, the masters have not brought into them the genius of their touch. But we walk to the window, that sunset golden, the dying of a day, God painted that. We look to the waters alive with motion, and to the swaying trees, swaying with a wind invisible, all moving pictures from the hand of God.

Our carpets may be worn and thread bare by the feet of those who have gone before, and whom we are hastening now to join, but the Great Weaver, is just waiting for the spring time to weave us a carpet of pure green that the poorest of us may walk upon.

So let us grow. In perception, in sense of proportion, in fidelity. What if we are unknown, is the struggle for fame worth while, for honor, for riches? "Give us this day our daily bread," and we will be content. So let us grow.

We are growing not for to-day, nor for to-morrow, nor for next week; we are growing not as the tree for lumber, nor the hog for pork, or the horse for the boneyard, nor to fill a plot in the cemetery, or call for a headstone. We grow far beyond the grave, for eternity; we grow for the vista in the future, we know not where it is, but this we know that it is further on beyond the ken of human eye. Let us grow; they cannot hurt us, we are immortals.

A MIDSUMMER REVERIE

To-day we rise by habit; and if it is our habit to wash with warm water we want warm water and cold won't do.

If it is our habit to take an eye-opener over the bar we want that eye-opener, and tea won't touch the spot.

If it is our habit to work while we work we will probably have worked hard to-day, and if it has been our habit to loaf, it is very likely that to-day will have been spent in the usual way.

The fact is, whether we care to admit it or not, that we are all practically controlled by habit. By constant repetitions we have given ourselves over as willing slaves. This is necessary, for if it were not so, no man or woman would be able to accomplish a fraction of that which now, by the kind offices of habit, is easily made possible. Habit is not hardly recognized as often as we might think. Its importance as one of life's factors may not be overestimated. The spending of our hours and our minutes, the earning of our dollars, the saving of our cents, our friends, homes, clothes, ideas and ambitions are but the natural consequences of fixed habit. Now, if you agree to it, that habit is one of life's greatest influences, perhaps you may admit that it is worth while looking after these habits. If it is so that our friends are made by habit, it may be just as well for us to pick out good friends and ones that are worth while.

Our friends are not only made through habit, but habit determines our destiny and the positions we will fill. We become valuable to the firm we work for by habit, and by habit we become of no account, unreliable and shiftless.

It is a habit for some men to be forever living in their past, while we know of others whose lives are lit by hope, for it is their pleasing habit to anticipate better things in the future of each to-morrow. We all know of those who have formed the habit of being pleasant, even in the face of vexation, and there are those who seem cross even in the presence of smiles. And of these two habits it is easily discerned which is the better and the one to be coveted.

Take it in families. We know that in some families there are those who by habit are generally quarrelsome and nagging, and find fault on slight provocation, and in these same families there are those who by habit have established a self-control and who act as the peace-makers, and who always pass on the praise whenever merit shows itself in any member of the household. And here, again, it is not hard to discover which habit one would have.

Habit makes us safe or unsafe.

It is as plain as the alphabet that if we have formed good habits they will safeguard us and make it very disagreeable for us to acquire bad ones.

It is very apparent to the one who has been in the habit of crawling into bed at the stroke of twelve or one that it is very disagreeable to turn into bed at an earlier time.

If by habit we read decent literature, look at decent pictures, go to decent shows and talk on decent subjects, it will be distasteful for us to sink to the indecent.

If by habit we have taken high ground it will be very distasteful to go down into the valley.

If we by habit have chosen the lowland it will be hard to rise. However, it is possible to break fetters, for men have escaped from prisons that are strong and where the sentries never sleep.

We overcome habit by habit.

PLAIN TALK ABOUT CRIPPEN.

(Catholic Reegister.)

The Crippen delinquent deserves nothing but prompt legal strangling. He is a degenerate of the first water, with a homicidal mania besides. If he had money enough and the trial took place to the south of us, he might escape the gallows like Thaw, and so many others, on the Dementia Americana plea. Money will not save him in the English courts. The sooner he is strung up and the wanton wench with him sent to the reformatory, the better for common decency and the respite of law which is due from all good citizens.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

He was not expecting this tongue. Besides, his German had never been a finished product. For all that, he made a passable reply.

"You speak as many languages as a Swiss hotel concierge."

"I wish I did. My mother had one idea in regard to my youth—I should speak four languages and eventually become a great diplomat. My mother had one of the loveliest voices. It was a joy to hear her speak, now Italian, now German, now French. We were great comrades. It was rare fun to go with her on an antique hunting expedition. They never fooled her nor got the better of her in a bargain."

She liked the way he spoke of his mother.

"But you," he said—"you are not Italian?"

She smiled.

Her fingers stirred over the keys again, and Grieg's "Papillon" fluttered softly from flower to flower.

CHAPTER VI.

INTO THE FOG AGAIN.

PRESENTLY she spoke, still playing softly.

"My father was an American, my mother Italian. But I have lived in Europe nearly all my life. There! You have more of my history than I intended telling you." The music went dreamily.

"I knew it! Who but an American woman would have the courage to do what you are doing tonight? Who but one of mine own countrywomen would trust me so wholly and accept me so frankly for what I am—an American gentleman?"

"Softly!" she warned. "You will dig a pit for your vanity."

"No. I am an American gentleman, and I am proud of it, though this statement in your ears may have a schoolboy ring."

"A nobility in this country? Impossible!"

"Not the kind you find in the Almanach de Gotha. I speak of the nobility of the heart and the mind." He was very much in earnest now.

"Indeed!" The music stopped, and she turned. She regarded his earnestness with favor. He continued:

"I have traveled much. I have found noblemen everywhere, in all climes, and also I have found beasts. Oh, I confess that my country is not wholly free from the beast! But the beast here is a beast—shunned, discredited, outcast. On the other side, if he be mentioned in the Almanach, they give him sashes and decorations. And they credit us with being money mad! It is not true."

"But, if you are not money mad, why these great fortunes?" dubiously.

"At a certain age a fortune in this country doubles itself without any effort on the part of the owner. Few of us marry for money, and when we do we at least have the manhood to keep the letter of our bargain."

"And when you marry?" she queried.

"Well, it is generally the woman we love. Dowries are not considered. There is no social law which forbids a dowerless girl to marry a dowerless man," laughing. "But over there it is always and eternally a business contract simply. You know that."

"Yes, a business contract," listlessly.

"But they talk of nobility on the other side. That is it; they talk, talk—Italy, France, Germany! Why, I had rather be the son of an English farmer than a prince on the continent. And I had rather be what I am than the greatest nobleman in England."

"Go on, go on! I like it. What do you call it—jingo?" she laughed.

"Call it what you will. Look at the men we produce. Three or four hundred years ago Europe gave us great poets, great artists, great soldiers, great churchmen and great rascals. I admire a great rascal when he is a Napoleon, a Talleyrand, a Machiavelli. But a petty one! We have no art, no music, no antiquity, but we have a race of gentlemen. The old country is not breeding them nowadays."

"Signora, dinner is served," the maid announced.

"Signora!" thought Hillard.

"After you, Mr. Hillard," she said.

He bowed and passed on before her, but not till he had passed did he understand the maneuver. To follow her would have been nothing less than the temptation to pluck at the strings of her mask. Would he have touched it? He could not say.

That dinner! Was he in New York? Was it not Bagdad, the bottle and the genii? Had he ever, even in his most romantic dreams, expected to turn a page so charming, so enchanting or so dangerous to his peace of mind, a game of magical hide and seek?

And she? A whim, a fantastic, unaccountable whim—the whim of a woman seeking forgetfulness, not counting the cost nor caring, simply a whim.

On the little table was a Tuscany brass lamp of three wicks, fed by olive oil. It was sufficient to light the table, but the rest of the room was sunk in darkness. He half understood that there was a definite purpose in this semi-illumination. She had no wish that he should by chance recognize anything familiar in this house.

"May I ask you one question?" he asked.

"No," promptly. There was something in his eyes that made her grow wary of a sudden.

"Then I shan't ask it. I shall not ask you if you are married."

"And I shall not say one way or the other."

She smiled, and he laughed quietly.

A running conversation; a fencing match with words and phrases; time after time she touched him, but with all his skill he could not break through her guard.

"And that interesting dissertation on the American gentleman?" she said icily.

"That's the trouble with posing as a moralist. One must live up to the precepts. Would you believe me if I told you that at the age of three and thirty I am still heart whole?"

She deliberately drew a line across the center of the table.

She parried, "I trust you will not spoil that excellent record by making love to me." She reached for the matches, touched off one, watched it burn for a moment, extinguished it and then deliberately drew a line across the center of the tablecloth.

"Now, what might that represent?" he asked curiously.

"A line, Mr. Hillard. The moment you cross that line that moment you leave this house. On guard!"

"Come, that is not brave. You can retreat till your shoulders touch the mat, but I must stand this side of the line, unable to reach you. And you have the advantage of the mask besides. You are not a fair fencer."

"The odds should be in my favor. I am a woman. My wrist is not so strong as yours."

"Physically, of course, I may pass the line, to reach the salt, for instance. Will that be against the rules? You have put temptation in my path."

"Bid Satan get behind thee."

"I wish I knew the color of your eyes. Behind those holes I see nothing but points of fire, no color."

"They are blue. But supposing I wear this mask because my face is dreadfully scarred?"

"Vanity, yes; but scars, never. At least never so deep as you yourself can make. You wear that mask but out of mercy to me."

Once she rose and approached the window, slyly raising the mask and breathing deeply of the cold air which rushed in through the crevices. When she turned she found that he, too, had risen. He was looking at the steins, one of which he held in his hand. Moreover, he returned and set the stein down beside his plate.

"Tell me, why do you do that?" There was an anxious note in her voice.

"I have an idea. But let us proceed with the dinner. This salad"—

"I am more interested in the idea." She pushed aside the salad and took a sip of the ruby burgundy. Had he discovered something?

"May I smoke?" he asked.

"By all means."

He lighted a cigarette and put the case near the line.

"Do you enjoy a cigarette?"

"Sometimes," she answered. "But the idea"—

"Will you not have one?" He moved the case still nearer to the line.

She reached out a firm round white arm.

"One moment," he said. "Let us understand each other thoroughly."

"What do you mean?" her arm poised in midair.

"To touch a cigarette you must cross the line to this side."

She withdrew her arm slowly.

"I shall not smoke. If I crossed the line I should establish a dangerous precedent. And I must have that idea."

"The mirror over the piano confused me. I have seen it somewhere before. Then there is that old copy of Botticelli. The frame is familiar, but I could not place it. This stein, however!" He laughed. The laughter was boyish, even triumphant.

"Well, that stein?" She was now leaning across the table, her fingers tense on the cloth.

"I bought that stein two seasons ago. This is the Sandfords' place, and you are the veiled lady who has been riding Mrs. Sandford's favorite hunter in the park."

They stood up simultaneously. In a matter of this sort he was by far the quicker. In an instant he had caught her by the wrist, at the same time drawing her irresistibly round the table toward him.

"I must see your face. I shall never be at peace if I do not."

"Certainly you will never know any peace if you do. Be careful."

His free hand stole toward the strings of her mask. She moved not. His face was very close to hers now. If only she would struggle! He released her wrist.

"No; I haven't the courage. If I take that mask from your face it will be the end. And I do not want this ever to end. If you will not let me see your face of your own free will, so be it. I shall see it some day, mark me. Fate does not cross two paths in this manner without a purpose." He stepped back slowly. "You do not understand the lure of that mask."

"Perhaps I do. I am beginning to admire your self control, Mr. Hillard. But I am tired now, and I must ask you to go."

"Once more, will you let me see your face?"

"No. If, as you say, fate intends for us to meet again you will see it. But I have my doubts. So it is my will to pass out of your life as completely as though I had never entered it—from one fog into another. No, I am not a happy woman. I am not happy in my friendships. Listen to me," and her voice grew low and sweet. "Let me appeal to your imagination. This light adventure shall be a souvenir for your old age. One night romance stepped into your life and out of it. Think! There will always be the same charm, the same mystery, the same enchantment. I shall always be Cinderella or the sleeping beauty or what your fancy wills. Do you understand me?

"Nothing," she proceeded, "nothing lasts so long in the recollection as a pleasant mystery—in other days, in other times. Well, on my side I shall recall this night pleasantly. Without knowing it you have given me a new foothold in life. I did not believe that there lived a single man who could keep to the letter of his bargain. Good night! And do not lean out of any more windows," she added lightly.

"You are right," he said reluctantly, "something to dream over in my old age. And certainly I shall dream of it—a flash of sunlight in the window."

Then slowly he reached down toward her wineglass. She understood his purpose and essayed to stop him.

"Do not deny me this little thing," he said.

She let her hand fall. He took the glass, held it against the light to see where her lips had touched it. Carefully he poured out the wine from the opposite side and kissed the rim.

"I shall keep this glass. I must have some visible object to make sure that this hasn't been a dream."

"You may kiss my hand, Mr. Hillard."

"Be careful!"

He bent quickly and kissed not the hand, but the wrist where the marks of his fingers still remained faintly. He squared himself, and gazed long and steadfastly into her eyes. There was a flutter in her heart that she was unable to define. On his part he realized the sooner he was gone the better. There was a limit to his self control. He gained the street somehow. There he stopped and turned. Did the curtain move? He wasn't sure, but he raised his hat, settled it firmly on his head and walked rapidly away.

IT LOOKED LIKE A BIG DAY AT STONEY LAKE YESTERDAY

When the Annual Regatta of the Stoney Lake Cottagers' Association Was Held to Larger "Business" Than Ever--Motor Boat Finishes the Climax of Fine Programme of Sports--Prizes Presented in Pavilion--Wilfrid Stratton and Marion Denne Get Individual Cups.

The sun was bright, the day was fair, and ev'ryone from ev'rywhere seemed to be there, and "I declare," said uncle, on the nor' east shore, "I never see a crowd before that could compare in any way with that one on the holiday."

Juniper Island, Stony Lake, was the big magnet of the pleasure seekers yesterday, and the island and the surrounding waters presented an almost bewildering scene of color and activity.

There were hordes of people there on the occasion of the annual regatta under the auspices of the Stony Lake Cottagers' Association, and every once in a while the huge assemblage was augmented with new crowds from the boats of the steamboat lines, till it seemed as if they would overflow the island.

The cottagers and visitors at the lake turned out en masse, of course, and the influx of outside spectators was an unusually large one. It can be stated with authority that the attendance was the largest of any that has ever graced the regatta, and the success of the affair won the most enthusiastic praise for the committee and competitors.

And boats—there were every kind of craft, from punts to small lake steamers, and Mr. Oxley, the clerk of the course, shared with the megaphones from the judge's stand and official float, the responsibility of chasing the restless navigators from the race course.

The course of the races is the most sacred of places at a regatta, and to trespass on it is an offence of no small seriousness. However, there was a busy time keeping it cleared yesterday, but in spite of this not a single race was interfered with, so vigilant were the guardians of the right of way and all the contestants got away to a good start and an unobstructed finish.

The sailing races were held in the morning, and the first race of the afternoon programme—the boys' single canoe—started on good time, and the entire list of events proceeded to the end of the bill without a hitch.

All of the races were interesting, and while many of them were bristling with exciting features, the most sensational battle of the course was that in the motor boat races between the "Black Arrow" and "The Sifroy."

In the first open race for motor boats the event became practically an elimination contest, for the other entrants couldn't urge their launches fast enough to offer any race to the two speedy greyhounds mentioned.

"The Sifroy" won the open in a shower of spray with the "Black Arrow" shooting through the water in the wake of the leader and only two lengths behind. The finish brought the crowd to its feet and aroused great enthusiasm. In the second handicap motor boat race the judges wanted to give the "Black Arrow" a slight handicap, but Mr. Claude Rogers, the owner of the launch, wouldn't hear of it, and they both took the scratch, the "Black Arrow" winning this time by four lengths or so.

To Miss M. Denne and Master Wilfrid Stratton belongs the honor of winning the lady's and gentleman's silver cup, respectively, for the greatest aggregate of points. Mr. Harold Knapman is now the permanent holder of the Stratton cup for the open sailing race, his win of yesterday making him victor for three successive years, and thus giving him the privilege of annexing the trophy.

The band of the 57th Regiment provided excellent selections during the afternoon.

In the evening the prizes were presented in the pavilion by Hon. J. R. Stratton. He complimented the winners on their success, commended the committee for its hard and well-directed work, and encouraged the young people to take a lively interest in the regatta.

The prize winners were loudly applauded as they stepped forward to receive their prizes, which were mostly silver and bronze medals.

At the conclusion of the presenting of the prizes dancing was held till midnight, Halpany's orchestra playing acceptably for the dances.

The regatta committee was composed as follows—Laurence H. Graham, chairman; G. E. Oxley, secretary; J. Clarke Acton and R. H. Burnham.

In Group A. are given the names of all candidates who have obtained complete junior matriculation by passing on the eleven required examination papers, which are as follows:—English Composition, English Literature, History (Ancient and British and Canadian), Algebra, Geometry, Latin Authors, Latin Composition, together with the four papers in two of the following subjects:—Experimental Science, (Physics and Chemistry), French (Authors and Composition), German (Authors and Composition.)

In group B. are given the names of those who have passed in at least eight papers required for complete matriculation. They have, therefore, failed in not more than three of the required papers. The papers in which these candidates have failed will be shown in their certificates. They may complete matriculation by passing in all the remaining papers at one subsequent examination.

In Group C. are given the names of those who have written upon any number of matriculation papers less than the eleven required for complete matriculation, and who have passed on all papers upon which they have written. In this list will be found the names of successful candidates who have written only on those papers required for matriculation into the Faculty of Applied Science or into the Ontario College of Pharmacy.

Normal Entrance candidates, who were also candidates for matriculation, have been considered in the above results. The names of such candidates, if successful, in obtaining complete matriculation, are included in Group A. Candidates who have failed on Normal entrance papers, but who have passed in the additional matriculation papers taken, are reported in Group C.

The certificates of the successful candidates and the statements of marks of those who have failed will be sent to the principals fo the High schools and Collegiate Institutes or to the Public School Inspectors in about a week. Candidates will apply to these officials, not to the department for the reports in detail.

FACTORY BUILDING TO BE SOLD

Attention is called to the advertisement in another column, offering for sale the buildings on the property about to be used to construct the new dam at Auburn. The buildings lie in the way of the new raceway or canal to take the water to the power house, as by placing the power house further down the river, additional head will be gained. In the buildings to be sacrificed is a lot of the very finest timber, and all in good condition, and the chance to secure it is a good one.

FANS SAW FAST BALL ON HOLIDAY

T. A. S. Trimmed Cobourg to Tune of 5-2—Feature of Game Was Turpin's Four Sack Wallop—Teams Worked Up to the Standard in Every Innings

The T.A.S. again proved the reason why they should be the representatives in the baseball of this city. Yesterday afternoon a large number of fans and fanettes gathered at Riverside Park to give the Cobourg Red Birds a welcome, and also to urge the town boys to victory. The weatherman was exceptionally kind and gave out some most desirable weather. At three o'clock, after each team had sufficient time to warm up, the T.A.S. took the field to battle for a game which proved to be one of the best exhibitions of ball that the fans of this city have seen. The first inning was run on without a hitch, everything working like machinery, but the second saw the T.A.S. with a lead of two runs. In the fourth one run was registered, while in the fifth the last two scores tallied by the winners were made.

Turpin, who is the same old "Dick" came into the game by picking off a two bagger the first time up and in the ninth he brought the fans to their feet when he slammed out a four bagger, bringing in Glenn and himself.

Glenn, the pitcher who has been gaining such fame in the past few weeks, handled the mound fairly good, getting wild at times.

McFadden, who has been catching well this year for the T.A.S., gave, if anything, a better performance yesterday than he has in previous battles, while his esteemed partner, Quinlan, performed in fine style.

Sheehy, the new find, gave good account of himself, and although he had little to do in the field, he made connection with several of Glenn's benders. The "Chemong Cubs" seem to put men into condition. It looked that way when "Bill" O'Brien leaned on several. Hayden, the third baseman of the Cobourg bunch, showed good form and covered the third pillow in a creditable manner.

At the close of the first of the ninth one of the most doubtful games of the season was brought to a finish as it was almost impossible to pick the winners until the last.

The following is the batting order of the teams:

COBOURG.

Third base—Hayden.
Short-stop—Guy.
Catcher—Turpin.
First—Payne.
Centre field—Burge.
Pitcher—Glenn.
Second base—Holnbeck.

T.A.S.

Third base—Callaghan.
First base—M. O'Brien.
Pitcher—Quinlan.
Catcher—McFadden.
Second base—Cahill.
Centre field—W. O'Brien.
Short-stop—Corkery.
Right field—Rose.

All members who desire to participate in this match are requested to send in their names to the secretary, Dr. Marshall, at once, so that the rinks may be selected and have some practice.

CORBETT'S UNKNOWN

Albany, Mo., Aug. 3.—Miles McLeod, said to be the unknown whom Corbett has in training for a meeting with Jack Johnson, is a farmer, whose parents live near here. He is six feet six inches in height and powerfully built. Recently he left for Chicago. It was rumored at the time that he intended to go into training with the purpose of challenging Jack Johnson.

McLeod's parents are opposed to pugigism. Friends say he had never seen a prize fight and they regard the announcement of his pugilistic aspirations.

BIG FIRE IN COCHRANE

Nineteen Business Places Are Destroyed by Flames.

Year-Old Ontario Town Has a Serious Interruption to Its Remarkable Growth When an Entire Block Is Wiped Out and Nineteen Families Are Homeless—Tents and Supplies Are Rushed in From Cobalt.

North Bay, Aug. 8.—Cochrane, 252 miles north of this place, the youngest town of the north, little more than one year old, but a lusty young community, whose rapid growth has been a marvel, received its first set-back yesterday when fire licked up nineteen business places. As the merchants occupied living rooms above the stores, nineteen families are homeless, and tents are being hurried to the scene from Cobalt, to house the unfortunates, until other arrangements can be made.

Shortly after two o'clock yesterday morning railway men noticed a blaze in Bradley's real estate office, and the alarm was at once given by the blowing of engine whistles and by men running from house to house to arouse sleeping occupants. Fortunately there was no wind blowing, or the entire town would have been fire-swept. As it was the flames spread with great rapidity, leaping from one frame building to another, and the efforts of the bucket brigade were directed to keeping the fire confined to one side of the street.

An entire block, facing upon two streets, was wiped out, nineteen buildings being completely destroyed. Efforts were made to save stock, and merchandise was piled in great heaps in the middle of the streets, and much that escaped the flames was damaged by mud and handling. Only one house is left standing in the area devastated, and the sprightly little town presented a sorry appearance with a big black gash across the centre, and goods scattered promiscuously in the streets.

The locomotives of the T. & N. O. Railway, Foley Bros., and Fauquier Bros., contractors, were pressed into service, and supplied water for bucket brigades.

The fire broke out at 2 o'clock yesterday morning, and burned fiercely until 6 o'clock, when everything in its path had been licked up and the flames gave up for lack of fuel.

The homeless ones are being looked after at the King George and Cochrane Hotels for meals, but the sleeping question last night was a puzzle. Twenty special constables were sworn in yesterday morning to guard the salvage from fire, and the patrolling the burned district.

Rothschild Bros., general store, are the heaviest losers, with a stock of $25,000, and insurance of $15,000. J. Pelangio, Forsythe and Chamandy Bros., general merchants, are among the heavy losers, with stocks running from $10,000 to $20,000, and light insurance. The postoffice, drug store, Chinese laundry, and a number of the smaller stores were wiped out. The banks and hotels escaped. The loss will amount to $150,000, with small insurance. The list of those burned out includes P. Burns & Co., butchers; J. Pelangio, general merchant; Forsythe, general store, barber shop, ice cream parlor; New Ontario clothing store; Morrison, tailor; Mulligan's pool room; Bradley, real estate office; Suddy, grocer; Carter, druggist; Rothschild, general store and post-office; New Idea restaurant and Quick Lunch restaurant, Chamandy Bros., general store.

Bourassa's Anti-Naval Campaign.

St. Hyacinthe, Aug. 8.—Canada's naval policy was denounced here yesterday afternoon by Henri Bourassa, Jean Provost and other Nationalist speakers. It was represented as being un-Canadian, un-Liberal and contrary to the past principles of every political party of the Dominion.

AWAKENING OF SCIENCE

TO THE VALUE OF FRUIT

What is "FRUIT-A-TIVES"?

Medical men are just beginning to realize the possibilities of fruit in curing disease. Its action on the liver, kidneys and skin is wonderful. Yet fruit in its raw state is impracticable in treating disease because of the minute quantity of the active or curative principle contained in fruit juice.

A physician in Ottawa, after years of patient work, discovered a process, whereby the medicinal or bitter principle of fruit juice is increased in quantity and thus a more active and more valuable substance is obtained.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine in the world made of fruit.

Hundreds of prominent people in every section of the Dominion owe their good health to "Fruit-a-tives." Hundreds more are daily becoming stronger and better by taking them. "Fruit-a-tives" is daily proving its inestimable value as a natural cure in all cases of Constipation, Biliousness, Torpid Liver, Backache and Headache, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Kidney and Skin Troubles.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c. Sold by all dealers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

IN BRITISH CUSTODY

Crippen and Leneve Turned Over to Inspector Dew.

The Last Appearance of Prisoners In a Canadian Court Occurs at Quebec and Now They Are Ready For Removal to Great Britain—Throngs Hang About the Prison to Catch Sight of Crippen.

Quebec, Aug. 8.—Dr. Harvey H. Crippen and Miss Ethel Leneve, the young woman whom he brought with him across the ocean on his long but futile flight to escape the grip of Scotland Yard, made their final appearance before a Canadian court of justice. The two prisoners were brought before Judge Angers at 10.30 o'clock, when they were formally remanded in the custody of the British authorities represented by Detective Dew.

Dr. Crippen and the girl were taken from the jail to the Court House in separate closed carriages. The alleged murderer of his actress wife was accompanied by two guards in order to provide against any possible attempt to escape. The jail in which Dr. Crippen occupies a cell was the Mecca of hundreds of people yesterday, who walked around it in a vain attempt to catch a glimpse of the physician. Many people secured permits to visit the jail, and presented them in the hope that they might be able to see Crippen. Crippen attended Mass in the jail chapel at 9 o'clock. Attendance at Divine service is compulsory, and Crippen made no demur when informed that he was expected to go. He was escorted in between two guards, and sat apart from the rest of the prisoners.

Ethel Leneve spent the day in her cell looking out of its narrow window. When approached by Governor Morin in regard to attending the Anglican service she showed the nervous strain under which she has been laboring since here dramatic arrest on the Montrose. "Oh, I don't wish to go; please don't ask me," she pleaded with tears in her eyes. When Governor Morin reminded her of the prison rules her agitation was so great that she was allowed to stay in her cell.

Three cablegrams were received by the prisoners Saturday and Sunday, but no answers were sent. Governor Morin, through whom the messages passed, has not made known their purport. The story that Ethel Leneve declared she "hated Dr. Crippen" is emphatically denied. According to the attendants at the jail the girl never mentions Dr. Crippen's name.

It is stated that Miss Leneve received a telegram from a New York theatrical manager offering her $1,000 a week for an indefinite engagement in vaudeville, to begin immediately upon her release from prison in the event that she is set free.

Strike Leaders Endorsed.

Montreal, Aug. 8.—Members of the general committee of trainmen, yardmen and conductors, completed their work Saturday, and left for home in the afternoon. It was stated after the conference that the discussion was friendly, and that the committeemen were satisfied with the explanation given them by Vice-Presidents Murdock and Berry, and they endorsed the course taken by the strike leaders.

Discussion will continue between the railways and representatives of the men. Thirty delegates of the firemen's union are expected to arrive in Montreal to-day, for a discussion of a new schedule of wages. The conference is expected to be friendly, marking the close of the agreement and the opening of another on the basis of an increase of pay.

An Editor's Heroism.

Deposit, N.Y., Aug. 8.—W. R. Michaelis, publisher of The Chicago Staats Zeitung, was drowned at Oquaga Lake, a few miles from here, yesterday afternoon and his body recovered three hours afterward. Deceased was out in a boat with his little eight-year-old daughter, who lost her hat, and, in reaching out for it, fell overboard. The father jumped out after the child, and, catching hold of her, held her above the water until his strength failed. Parties in boats nearby rescued the child, but the father sank and was drowned.

DAY QUIET IN SPAIN

Threatened Religious Riots Fail to Materialize.

Clerical Leaders Call Off Their Projected Demonstration as a Result of the Heavy Patrol of Soldiers—"Death to Spain, Long Live the Pope" Is Cry of Isolated Groups—Peasants Disarmed; Sent Home.

San Sebastian, Aug. 8.—The Government's rigorous measures and the formal renunciation by the Catholic junta of the threatened demonstration in this city insured comparative tranquility yesterday, and a largely attended bull fight was the chief incident of the day. From daylight the streets were patrolled by cavalry, infantry and gendarmes, while heavy bodies of troops were held in readiness in the barracks at Miramar Palace, where the Queen Mother and the royal children are in residence.

The gravest incident occurred Saturday evening, when groups of Catholics assembled, shouting "Death to Spain, long live the Pope." Thousands of indignant people rushed towards the manifestants, and only the personal intervention of the governor, at the head of a platoon of police, prevented an attack. Nearly 150 arrests were made.

Many amusing scenes were witnessed. Priests, leading trudging bands of peasants, took to their heels when they found the city in the possession of the military. The peasants, all their courage gone, were disarmed and easily persuaded to return to their homes. In some cases the soldiers were compelled to supply food to the poor people, who had come into the city to rail at the Government.

The local authorities are convinced that the Catholic demonstration masked a Carlist plot.

Catholics are extremely indignant at the Government's repressive measures.. Senor Urguijo, the chief organizer of the movement, declared yesterday that the purpose of the manifestation was peaceful. There were to be no speeches, and those taking part were to be unarmed. But, he said, when the Government treated the matter as if it were civil war, he had called off the manifestation, to prevent bloodshed. He said that it was their intention later to take part in peaceful manifestations at Pamplona, in the Province of Navarre, and at Vittoria, in Alava, to prove that the anti-clerical policy of the Government was opposed by the Spanish people. "Even the Queen Mother is bitterly hostile to it," he added.

The authorities declare that the monks have taken an active part in fomenting the agitation, and it is charged that they have distributed arms among the people.

The Vatican Optimistic.

Rome, Aug. 8.—The feeling at the Vatican yesterday was optimistic. Hope is entertained that an understanding with the Spanish Government will soon be reached. It is pointed out by the Vatican that Premier Canalejas must be grateful to the papacy for restraining its followers from disorders which might lead to civil war.

The Vatican and Cardinal Merry del Val personally instructed the bishops and prominent personages throughout Spain to prevent demonstrations and disorders, it being desired to demonstrate that the holy see is anxious to maintain peaceful relations in the affairs of the peninsula.

Another reason for the cinciliatory attitude of the Vatican is the fact that the organizers of the proposed demonstrations are for the most part Carlists and any movement might eventually take on a revolutionary and anti-dynasite character, which the Vatican is determined shall be absolutely excluded from the present question.

A semi-official communication issued by the Vatican yesterday says that the relations with Portugal are normal. A new Portuguese ambassador to the holy see has not been appointed, it is explained, because of the recent change in the Cabinet at Lisbon.

The Pope Writes Alfonso.

Cowes, Isle of Wight, Aug. 8.—King Alfonso appeared reassured by the cheerful news yesterday from San Sebastian. It is understood that the Pope has written him an important autograph letter on the subject of the clerical conflict. The King made his customary round of social calls yesterday. His plans are unchanged, and he will go with Queen Victoria to Eaton Hall on Wednesday, as the guest of the Duke of Westminster, remaining there until Friday.

Killed Four Men.

Asheville, N.C., Aug. 8.—The jury in the case of the State v. James B. Allison, charged with the murder of Floyd McGhee, on July 5, returned a verdict of murder in the first degree. The convicted man will be sentenced to death Monday. The killing is alleged to have been brought about by McGhee's attentions to a woman. Allison, who is 40 years old, has killed four men in the last twelve years. He has heretofore escaped punishment by pleading self-defence.

Peary's Boat on Fire.

New York, Aug. 8.—Commander Peary's ship, the Roosevelt, which carried him north on his last successful dash to the Pole, caught fire early yesterday while lying in her berth in the East River, supposedly from spontaneous combustion in a rubbish heap. The night watchman, who turned in the alarm, was able to put out the flames unaided before the arrival of the fire company. The damage will not exceed $25.

Struck Oil In Busy City.

Pittsburg, Aug. 8.—Oil has been struck in the midst of the busy hum of this city. Within a few feet of a street where the trolley whizzes by every few minutes, a well was brought in on the north side and during the day flowed sixty barrels. The oil is of high grade, and is found in the hundred-foot sand.

Apparently, contrary to all scientific laws, it is the inside wheels of a racing automobile which leave the ground in rounding turns.

Stage In New Mexico Is Held Up and Bullion Worth $20,000 Taken.

Sante Fe, N.M., Aug. 8.—Capt. Fred Fornoff of the mounted police was notified on Saturday that the stage from Mogollon, Southwest Socorro, coming to Silver City, was held up, the driver killed and $20,000 stolen. Mogollon is 70 miles from a telegraph station.

This stage was held up last year and three women passenger robbed of $450. Several posses took up the trail for the robbers yesterday.

According to later reports the robbers obtained 12 bars of gold, valued at $18,000, and belonging to the Ernestine Mining Co. and the Socorro Mining Co.

Jose Dominguez, the driver, was shot in the head and thrown out in the road by the bandits. The stage was then driven off and robbed. When the stage was two and a half hours late at Glenwood, Driver Jake Rouse, who was to relieve Dominguez, started out to meet him, and found him dead in the road. The mail sacks were unmolested. There were no passengers.

Dream Came True.

Toronto, Aug. 8.—Having twice dreamed that he should miss his grip upon the casing of an elevator shaft upon which he was working at the factory of Gourlay, Winter & Leeming in Logan avenue, George Mercer, 67 Hampton avenue, made his dream come true Saturday morning by falling 60 feet down the shaft to the basement. He was hurried to the General Hospital in which was believed to be a dying condition, but it was found that save for a compound fracture of the right leg, he was practically uninjured.

Mercer is 23 years of age and a single man, living at 67 Hampton avenue. He told the police who took him to the hospital, that twice last week he had dreamed of falling down the shaft, and had been taking particular care not to do so.

Biggest Cruiser Afloat.

London, Aug. 7.—The armored cruiser Lion, the largest and most powerful cruiser in the world, was launched at the dockyard at Devonport on Saturday. The keel of the giant cruiser was laid Nov. 29.

Though the usual secrecy in regard to design was at first maintained, it is now known that the cruiser, upon its 700 feet of deck, will carry eight guns of 13 1-2 inch calibre, throwing projectiles of 1,250 pounds. They will be mounted in four barbettes, all on the centre line of the ship. The cruiser will have a displacement when completed of 26,850 tons, and will be driven by turbine engines of 70,000 horse-power, giving her an expected speed of 28 knots. Her superiority over her predecessor in the cruising battleship class is shown by the comparison of her 70,000 horse-power with the earlier maximum of 45,000.

Canadian Steamer Seized.

Sandusky, Ohio, Aug. 8.—The Canadian steamer City of Dresden, Capt. J. W. Hest, of this port, master, was seized Saturday evening by Chas. A. Judson, collector of customs, for an alleged violation of the customs law. Judson refused to discuss the case, but it is learned that the steamer put ashore a cargo brought here from Rondeau, Ont., without first obtaining the necessary permission from the customs authorities.

While Collector Judson refuses to make known the amount of the fine imposed, officers of the Dresden say it was $2,000, the maximum amount prescribed by law. The fine was paid.

Bones of Human Being.

Cornwall, Aug. 8.—About 10 o'clock Saturday night John Mattices' fine barns near Moulinette, six miles west of here, were burned to the ground, along with the season's hay crop, a manure spreader, corn binder, grain binder and other machinery. The cause of the fire is unknown, but it is thought that it may have been caused by tramps sleeping in the hay, and it is rumored that bones, thought to be those of a human being, were found in the ashes yesterday.

Will Lock Out 15,000 Men.

Hamburg, Aug. 8.—The shipbuilding companies, in consequence of the strike of 8,000 mechanics here, have decided to lock out 15,000 workers, comprising sixty per cent. of all employes of the German shipyards, beginning August 11. The remaining 10,000 workmen have decided to strike in a body in the event of the lock-out being enforced.

AUSPICIOUS RE-OPENING OF MARK STREET CHURCH

The reopening of Mark St. Methodist Church on Sunday was marked by large congregations at both morning and evening services, and by two splendid sermons delivered by the Rev. J. B. Moore, a former pastor, who preached here about twelve years ago.

At the evening service, preceding the sermon, the pastor, Rev. H. C. Coon, made a few explanatory remarks concerning the financial outlay involved in renovating the present edifice. The total cost involved, including some work done to the parsonage last year, was about $350, and so well have the different societies of the church responded to meet this expense that at present only about $115 remains to be cleared off.

Mr. Coon said that he earnestly prayed that the church might continue to show the same enthusiasm and energy during the next year as it had in the past, and that it might meet with much future success.

Rev. Mr. Moore then took charge of the service, taking as his text, St. Luke, 13 chapter, 18th and 19th verses. "Then said he, unto what is the kingdom of God like, and whereunto shall I resemble it. It is like a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and cast into his garden, and it grew and waxed a great tree and the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it."

The following are some of the words of the speaker in dealing with this text—

"No passage is more pregnant with divine truth than the words of my text. The passage illustrates the growth of Christianity. Looking at the kingdom of God to-night we see at a glance the fitness of the comparison so small in the beginning, to-day so far-reaching. No one saw in the lowly Nazarene a person who would eventually revolutionize the world. Christ selected not the wealthy or influential to be the propagators of Christianity, but instead chose humble fishermen and others of low degree. People have thought that it was a great mistake to expect such men as these to exalt the world. Great men have gone before our Lord and attempted to reform the world and failed miserably. Aristotle, Socrates and others have striven by speech and actions to do it, but failed.

"The crying need of all branches of Christ's church to-day is the baptism of the holy spirit. It is needed in the pulpit, in the pew, and in the busy thoroughfares of this world's commerce. Oh for more pentecostal effusions. If you were to travel to the uttermost parts of the earth in all countries and climes there you would find the blessed gospel of Jesus Christ ennobling the people. The countries to-day that are the most progressive are where Jesus Christ reigns. The longings of the soul cannot be satisfied outside of Jesus Christ. Never be discouraged in the great work of God, no matter how inefficient you feel. Great problems confront us. The liquor traffic, for one, has been defying the armies of God for years. Men sometimes think that the wheels of existence would cease running if they were to drop out. Not so. King Edward has died. Other great men have passed away, but the great world rolls on."

Concluding, Mr. Moore made a strong and earnest plea for more devotedness to God.

Rev. Mr. Moore is a fluent and thrilling speaker, and his two addresses on Sunday were listened to with the closest attention.

At the morning service Mrs. (Dr.) Middleton sang a solo with much sweetness, and in the evening Miss Jackson, of Orillia, who is visiting friends here, also rendered a solo with much expression.

Infant Dead

Helen Rose Lasure, nine months of age, died last evening about 10 o'clock from cholera infantum. The little girl was a daughter of Mr. Joseph Lasure, 531 Parnell street, and had been ill only a short time.

The funeral was held this afternoon at four o'clock to the Roman Catholic cemetery.

A DEAD FISH THAT SPEAKS FOR ITSELF

When a dead fish speaks for itself it is not like the case of the monster of the deep that gets away.

And there is a dead fish in the window of W. J. Oke's store, George street, that eloquently tells of a famous capture.

Mr. F. Gravelle an employee of the Chemong Park hotel, was the man on the other end of the line, and Lake Chemong, opposite the hotel, was the place where the twenty-eight pound lunge was captured this morning at 8.15.

To be exact the fish weighs 28 1-4 pounds, and looks as though another fifteen pounds could be added without exaggeration, but exaggeration would never do—in a fish story.

When Mr. Gravelle first felt the bite he had the line between his teeth. He had no idea at the time of the first dull tug that he had caught a fish. He made for shore thinking he had a sunken island on the end of his line, when suddently the convulsive jerks on the fine convinced him that it was a live weight in tow. As the tugs became more vicious he stepped out of the boat near the shore and hauled the lunge up.

About half the summer population of the park has been photographed with the fish and each one has a souvenir that will convince the skeptical ones that he landed the 28, 38, 48 pound fish.

AUTO TURNED OVER BUGGY

An accident which might easily have been attended with much more serious results occurred on Saturday night.

A couple of young ladies, accompanied by a gentleman friend, while driving just outside of Peterborough, were struck by Mr. A. H. Stratton's auto, with the result that the buggy was overturned, and one of the young ladies sustained injuries which will necessitate her being confined to her home for a few days.

The other young lady escaped injury and was none the worse save for the shock.

The buggy was badly damaged, but the horse was uninjured.

I. O. F. HELD MAMMOTH EXCURSION TO STONEY LAKE ON THE HOLIDAY

The Independent Order of Foresters ran their annual excursion yesterday to Juniper Island and Mount Julian per steamer 'Otonabee.' Without doubt it was the most enthusiastic and largely attended excursion of the summer, and had there been two steamers chartered it is safe to say that sitting room would still have been at a premium. When the 'Otonabee' left the Wolfe street wharf at 7.30 she carried her full allowable quota of passengers, and many who came hurrying down at the last moment with eager, jubilant faces, turned disappointedly away when the order was given out that no more would be allowed on.

The boat was scheduled to [illegible] at the lift lock, and on its arr[illegible] there scores of people were found waiting, expecting to embark. Great was their woe when they learned of the crowded state of affairs on board.

The trip up the canal and to Juniper was greatly enjoyed, the Peterborough orchestra contributing great pleasure by their sprightly music.

Dancing commenced early in the trip and many devotees of the art whiled away what might have proved somewhat tedious hours attendant upon so many lockages. Archie Moore appeared to be in his element as master of ceremonies for the occasion.

On arrival at Juniper a number disembarked, after which the steamer took the remainder of the excursionists to Mount Julian, where a stay of about an hour was made and dinner partaken of.

The boat returned to Juniper, and nearly all embraced the opportunity of witnessing that event of the season at Stony Lake, namely, the regatta.

Here a very interesting stay was made until about five o'clock, those getting off passing the time in various ways, some in witnessing the different events of the regatta and others in the entrancing performance of the waltz and round dance.

The st[illegible] Water Lily' relieved the 'Ot[illegible] some of its passengers [illegible] trip, whereby relievi[illegible] Aug. 10[illegible] the rather congeste[illegible] was [illegible] affairs on board, and [illegible]esale lumb[illegible] the comfort of the [illegible]e lumber [illegible]

[illegible] committee of the I.O.F., whose names are given below, are to be greatly praised and congratulated on the success of the whole affair, which was conducted in their usual businesslike and systematic way. The committee were—Wm. Madill, F. C. Rook, D. Wallace, John Brownlee, G. McKee, A. Allison, John Buyers, C. Metcalfe and G. W. Powell.

GIFT FOR CAPT. McWILLIAMS

On Saturday evening, the officers of the 57th regiment held an informal banquet in their mess rooms in honor of Captain R. F. McWilliams, on the eve of his departure from the city to take up his residence in Winnipeg, where he will in the future follow his profession.

Lt.-Col. Stevenson on behalf of the officers, presented Captain McWilliams with a suitably engraved salad bowl as a token of their appreciation and esteem, and in doing so took occasion to speak of the efficient and exemplary manner in which Captain McWilliams discharged his duties as an officer during the ten years of his connection with the Peterborough Rangers. The commanding officer also referred in most commendatory terms of the active part taken by Captain McWilliams in civic, political, social, educational and religious affairs, and expressed the regret the citizens in general, and the members of the regiment in particular, would experience in his departure for the west whither the best wishes of the citizens of Peterborough would follow him.

Captain McWilliams made a fitting reply in which he feelingly thanked the officers for their kindly treatment of him, referred to the pleasant associations he enjoyed as an officer of the regiment and expressed his regret at leaving and his hope for the future success and prosperity of the regiment.

Other officers followed endorsing what had been said of the good qualities of Captain McWilliams and expressing the regret that all would feel over the loss of his efficient services.

Mr. King, of Detroit, who was present, on being called upon, paid his tribute to the ability and worth of the departing officer.

THE C.O.F. WENT TO HASTINGS

Excursions out of the city were extremely popular yesterday, and none more so than that of the Catholic Order of Foresters to Hastings per steamer, "Rainbow."

The boat was accompanied by the scow, thus providing ample space for dancing, which was largely indulged in. The musical end of the programme was well held up by a three-piece orchestra.

A brief stop was made at Idyl Wyld and many got off here and the scow also was left at the wharf.

The "Rainbow" then proceeded to Hastings, where a stay of about one hour for dinner was also made.

A feature of the picnic, which was both rather ludicrous and embarrassing happened when just a little way out of Hastings on the return trip. The steamer struck shallow water and grounded on some rocks.

For over one hour there they stayed and many ladies began to experience their first taste of being shipwrecked.

However, after valiant efforts on the part of the crew, she was finally dislodged and proceeded on her way.

The street railway wharf was reached early in the evening where everybody alighted.

S.O.E.'S SUCCESSFUL OUTING

The Sons of England held a highly successful and well attended outing to Stony Lake on Civic Holiday.

The steamer 'Lintonia' carried the party to Juniper Island, where everybody stopped off and took in the regatta.

The trip was made over the lift lock and up the canal, and good time was made by this speedy little boat.

Music was supplied for the occasion and an extremely pleasant day was spent by all present.

Juniper was reached about one o'clock and dinner indulged in.

The return trip was commenced about four o'clock and Peterborough was reached in good time.

The committee in charge and the officials of the boat did all in their power to make the excursion agreeable and pleasing to everyone present and are to be congratulated on the successful affair.

The steamer looked very pretty, having streams of flags suspended all around the decks and bow.

IF YOU WANT TO FIGHT IT OUT

From the age of 45 years the eyes have undergone a natural change (which no eye escapes), so that they are either out of focus for distance or near vision, especially at night. You cannot see distinctly with the paper a foot from the eyes and you need strong light. Your real need is suitable glasses. If you want to fight this difficulty out with nature you may do so, millions have done it before you and have been worsted in the fight. We are relieving the eyes of such cases every day. Perhaps you will be wise by taking the matter in time.

NEW YORK'S CHIEF EXECUTIVE IS IN A GRAVE CONDITION

As Result of Attack by a Dismissed Civic Employee, Gaynor Lies in St. Mary's Hospital Suffering From a Bullet Wound in His Head.

New York, Aug. 10.—Wm. J. Gaynor, mayor of New York City, was shot in the head and seriously wounded yesterday as he stood on the promenade deck of the steamer Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, by James J. Gallagher, a discharged and disgruntled city employe. Gallagher was almost instantly overpowered and arrested.

The shot was fired at 9.45 o'clock yesterday morning, fifteen minutes before the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse was due to leave her pier at Hoboken, N.J., and the mayor was receiving God-speed from a group of friends preparatory to a vacation trip to Europe. The bullet struck him behind the right ear and ranged downward, inflicting a dangerous, though not necessarily fatal wound. Unless blood poison develops, surgeons are hopeful of the mayor's recovery, although at his age, 59 years, such a wound is essentially grave.

The mayor is at St. Mary's Hospital, Hoboken, surrounded by specialists, with members of his family gathered near. All early reports from the hospital were hopeful in tune, and last night six X-ray negatives of the wound were taken, to facilitate an operation for the removal of the bullet.

Gallagher, the would-be assassin, is locked in a cell at Jersey City, held without bail. He expresses no remorse.

The big liner was gay with flags and ringing with shouted "good-byes" when the tragedy occurred. Most of those who had been aboard the ship to say farewell to friends and relatives had gone ashore, but a little group remained to talk with the mayor. They were standing on the port side of the vessel, near the promenade deck and were posing for a group photograph when Gallagher, unnoticed, pushed his way almost to the mayor's side and fired point blank at his head.

He used a 38-calibre revolver, and an examination later disclosed that the first cartridge had missed fire. This probably saved the mayor's life, for Gallagher was less than two feet away when he first pulled the trigger. Backing away slightly in his excitement, he pulled the trigger a second time, and sent a bullet crashing into the mayor's neck, below the ear.

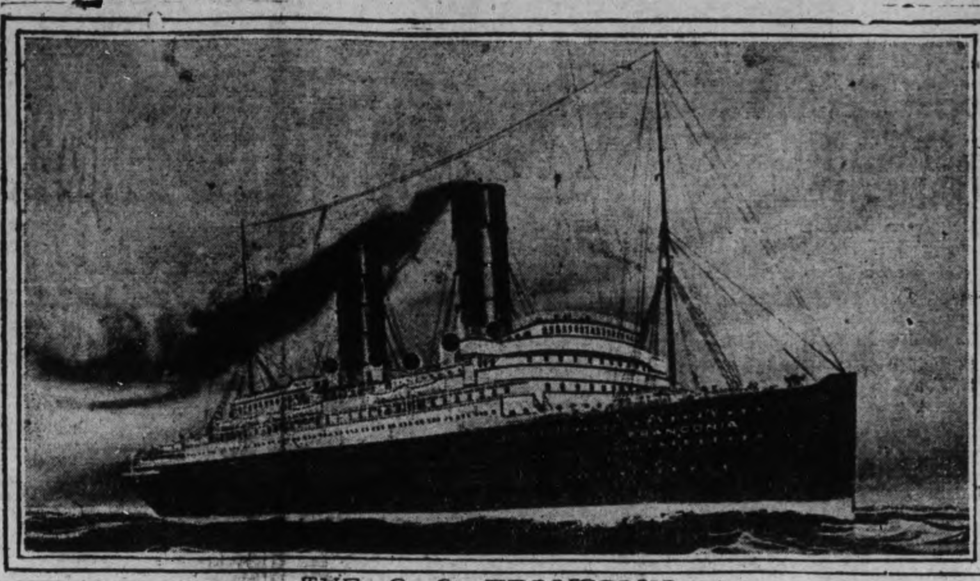
William H. (big Bill) Edwards, commissioner of street cleaning, and the former Princeton football star, lunged forward with his 300 pounds, just as Robert Adamson, the mayor's secretary, struck Gallagher's arm. As he did so a second shot pierced Edward's sleeve, inflicting a slight flesh wound on the commissioner's right arm, which remained undiscovered for hours because of the excitement. Unmindful of his wound, Edwards hit the man a crushing blow in the face, and they crashed to the deck together. Gallagher, struggling with the strength of desperation and pulling viciously at the trigger in an attempt to fire another shot.

Edwards was too much for him. He rained blow after blow in Gallagher's now bleeding face, while Adamson and Archibald R. Watson, corporation counsel for the city, flung themselves on the struggling two in an attempt to grasp the weapon. When Mr. Watson had obtained possession of it, Edwards and Gallagher continued a bitter struggle about the deck, Edwards now crying and shouting in his anger and excitement, and Gallagher panting, but fighting hard. When completely subdued by the former football star, a pair of steel nippers were slipped on his wrists by a special officer aboard the ship, and he was rushed through a hooting and threatening crowd off the vessel, into an automobile, and arraigned before Recorder McGovern of Hoboken.

Gallagher, judging by appearances and actions, is not a lunatic, but he has nourished in his heart a hatred for Mayor Gaynor ever since he was discharged as a night watchman in the department of docks and ferries in July last for incompetency. Since then he has repeatedly written the mayor, harping on an obsession that he had been persecuted, and demanding redress. He has even written to the governor, so it became known last night, and he went on board the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse yesterday with the expressed purpose of murdering the man whom he charged with having robbed him of his bread and butter.

U. S. Sends Ultimatum.

Washington, Aug. 10.—Invasion of American property in Nicaragua by soldiers of Madriz, has called forth a formal protest from the United States. The State Department has repeated its ultimatum to both factions in Nicaragua that American property must be protected.



THE S. S. FRANCONIA.

Though not so large in point of gross tonnage, nor bulk with the object of rivalling in speed the Lusitania and Mauretania, the Franconia will embody many features, especially in regard to her passenger accommodation, that will place her in the very front rank of modern liners. Her internal arrangements and accommodations will insure the comfort and convenience of all classes of passengers.

Early in 1911, when she will be ready to be placed in commission, she will be primarily attached to the Boston service, now being carried on by the Ivernia and Saxonia. She will be both larger and faster than the two latter boats, in fact, she will be the largest boat to enter Boston harbor. She has been constructed at Wallsend-on-Tyne, by the same company that was responsible for the building of the Mauretania, Ultonia, Ivernia and Carpathia.

The principal measurements of the vessel are—Length over all, 625 feet; breadth over all, 72 feet; gross tonnage, 18,000 tons; displacement, 25,000 tons; height of funnels, 140 feet above lowest furnace bats; diameter of funnels, 17 feet 6 inches; height of masts 200 feet above keels.

BOY'S LIFE IS SAVED

After Hope is Gone—Fell Into Water Tank and Was Almost Dead When Found.

Ingersoll, Aug. 10.—When discovered by chance at the bottom of a large water tank in the barnyard of his father's farm, Louis Vyse, the two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Vyse, who reside near Mount Elgin, was believed to be dead. The child's face had already turned black, and there was scarcely a sign indicating that he was alive. A local physician was summoned by telephone, and he made a rapid trip to the Vyse farm by auto. Although the family had practically given up all hope of the boy's life being saved, the physician worked heroically for over an hour and succeeded in resuscitating the child, who is expected to recover. The strange feature of the accident is that no one knows how long the child was in the water, he had not been missed, and was discovered when his brother went for a pail of water. There were about eighteen inches of water in the tank. The child is supposed to have climbed on top of the boards which were laid over the tank, and to have fallen through them.

AN EXCITING RACE IN AIR

Nancy, France, Aug. 10.—Leblanc and Aubrun again led the van in yesterday's leg of the cross-country aeroplane race. The second section of the flight was from Troyes to Nancy, a distance of 165 kilometres, or approximately 102 5-10 miles.

The race between the leaders was an exciting one. Aubrun started five minutes earlier than Leblanc, and the air men were within sight of each other until they landed here. Leblanc's machine proved the swifter and he gradually overhauled the other, reaching the goal thirty seconds ahead of his rival.

Both men used Bleriot monoplanes and steered by compass, checking their position from the flags which had been places on the church steeples in the villages over which fires that marked the course over the country stretches.

Both Leblanc and Auburn traveled with an average height of about 1,600 feet. They were badly shaken by the air eddies over the forest of Toul, west of this city. Leblanc's time was 2 hours 14 min. 59 secs. and Aubrun's was 2 hours 20 mins. 29 secs.

M. Leganeux was the only other contestant who arrived here without having made a stop.

THE RACE COST HIM HIS LIFE

Toronto, Aug. 10.—Over-zealousness in a window-cleaning race with his partner resulted in a fatal drop of five storeys for Harry Warnes yesterday afternoon.

He was an Englishman, 19 years old, and had been in Canada three and a half years. He was cleaning the outside of a window on the fifth floor of the Andrew Darling building on Spadina avenue, but had neglected, it is said, to secure himself with a rope, because he wanted to beat out his partner, Wallace Graham, who was similarly engaged on another window.

Switchman Killed by Train.

Belleville, Aug. 10.—Wm. Jordan, a G.T.R. switchman, who lived in Toronto, was killed in this city Monday evening. He was operating a switch on the line of the Grand Trunk in Pinnacle street, when his foot became caught in a frog and some cars passed over him, mutilating him in a horrible manner. Death was almost instantaneous. He was a married man with a family.

SUCCESS DEPENDS ON OURSELVES

Victoria, Aug. 10.—"The success or otherwise of the Canadian navy depends wholly upon the Canadian people. If they set out to make a navy they can do it, but if they are half-hearted the plan will not amount to anything. The movement of Canada in this respect is being watched by the whole world."

This was the statement made by Rear-Admiral Lyon of the royal navy, who is returning from China, where he has command of the China station. Discussing the Canadian action further, Admiral Lyon said the navy did not depend upon legislation, but upon the men and brains that were put into it. With times so good as they were in Canada at the present time he felt that it would be difficult to get young men to enter the navy as a profession.

FISHERIES ARBITRATION

London, Aug. 10.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—At The Hague yesterday Mr. Root pointed out that the treaty of 1818 contained restrictions on the use of banks for drying and salting fish on landing on those shores where America renounced the fishing rights. No mention was made on the treaty of any restrictions as regards the fishing coasts of Labrador and Newfoundland. For sixty years Britain had recognized this liberty to fish could not be restricted by any regulations drawn up by Britain. In 1878, after the incident at Fortune Bay, Lord Salisbury positively declared British sovereignty limited by the treaty of 1818, which could not be modified or affected by any ulterior colonial legislation.

It is expected the speeches will be concluded by Thursday or Friday.

Balloonist Dropped 100 Feet.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Aug. 10.—William McLeod, aged 22, was instantly killed at the Village of Trout Lake near this city Monday, when making an ascent in a balloon. In some way he was caught in the rigging of the balloon and was taken up a distance of 100 feet, when he dropped.

Fell From Hotel Window.

London, Ont., Aug. 10.—Geo. Jones, a man about 50 years, fell from a window of his room in the Bank Hotel about two o'clock yesterday morning, and was seriously injured.

WAS CRIPPEN'S ARREST ILLEGAL?

His Lawyer Says There Was a Flaw in Apprehension of Prisoner.

Quebec, Aug. 10.—A Montreal attorney, who does not wish his name disclosed at present, but who has been engaged by Arthur Newton, the London solicitor who is defending Dr. Crippen, announces there may yet be trouble over the return of the prisoners to England, should extradition be fought. The steamer Montrose is a Canadian boat, and as such is entirely and only directed [illegible] by the Dominion [illegible] The arrest of Dr. Cr[illegible] Leneve was made [illegible] the St. Lawrence Ri[illegible] authorities, whic[illegible] legal and wrong. Th[illegible] could not be m[illegible] than the federal police, and w[illegible] warrant from the Department of Justice.

Ethel Leneve received a cablegram late yesterday afternoon in the penitentiary, from her father, signed "Dad," urging upon her to maintain the strictest secrecy, and informing her that the money for her defence and Crippen's was being supplied by a famous London newspaper. The father also mentioned that he had given the story of her life exclusively to the same journal, on the understanding that the money would be given by this paper for his daughter's fight for freedom. The name of the newspaper was not given in the cable.

This disposes of the highly incredulous story which has been floating about during the past few days that the money for the prisoner's defence was being supplied by certain wealthy ladies in London, who were in the grip of Crippen, and who were in terror least he should tell the world the many secret discreditable things he knew concerning them. The case, it is understood, will then be fought by the ablest lawyers procurable in London.

Fireman Killed.

London, Aug. 10.—Fireman Ed. J. Martin of Sarnia tunnel was killed near Kelly's Siding on the G.T.R. yesterday morning. It is thought that he fell from the engine cab while looking at the injector and the train passed over his body, mangling it terribly.

WESTERN PROBLEMS WILL BE DISCUSSED

Victoria, Aug. 10.—Among the important western problems which will come before the general conference of the Methodist Church, which opens here on Aug. 14, will be the readjustment of the boundaries of the western conference. At present three districts, all in the confines of the Province of Manitoba, Brandon, Souris and Virden, belong to the Saskatchewan conference. It is felt that the three districts ought to belong to the Manitoba conference. This will make the Manitoba conference, which also includes New Ontario as far east as Port Arthur, a little unwieldly, and the suggestion is made to divide the Manitoba conference into two.

The Alberta conference has also passed a resolution asking that it be divided into northern and southern, with headquarters at Calgary and Edmonton. The three prairie provinces also want a western missionary executive.

Ratepayers Apathetic.

Orillia, Aug. 10.—Because 896 votes were required to be polled and only 771 turned out, the bylaw granting tax exemption to the Canada Refining and Smelting Co. was defeated. The matter may be taken before the private bills committee of the Legislature next session.

Roosevelt For Governor.

New York, Aug. 10.—Nominate Theodore Roosevelt for governor of New York and trust to luck, is the plan proposed by some of the leaders in the Republican organization in New York, as a way out of the political dilemna they are facing in this fall's campaign.

FIRE IN BOSTON

Million Dollar Loss in Big Conflagration—Ten Million Feet of Wood Goes up in Smoke.

Boston, Aug. 10.—A loss of upwards of $1,000,000 was caused by a fire in the wholesale lumber district. Starting in the lumber yards of Blacker & Shepard, at Dover and Albany streets, the blaze asumed early proportions of such magnitude that a general alarm, the first sounded in this city since 1872, followed within ten minutes of the first alarm.

The fire zone extended along both sides of Albany street, south from Dover street, on the east side, wiping out the buildings and ten million feet of lumber piled in the Fort Point channel docks of the Blacker & Shepard Co., and on the west side extending to the Thayer street public playground. Five brick buildings on the west side of Albany street were destroyed. These included a three-storey tenement block, four wood-working factories and the Boston fire department repair station, in which several pieces of fire apparatus were lost. The Blacker & Shepard Co.'s loss exceeds $300,000; the Boston fire department about $150,000.

CHARGES WERE UNFOUNDED

Belleville, Aug. 10.—Dr. R. W. Bell, inspector of the Provincial Board of Health, investigated on Monday the charges of negligence in connection with scarlet fever cases at the Deaf and Dumb Institution, of which Dr. C. B. Coughlin is superintendent.

Dr. Bell examined the records and correspondence and questioned the different members of the staff.

At the close he stated that there was no proof that the contagion was carried from the institution to St. Thomas, and that there were other cases in that city at the same time. Records showed that not only all reasonable, but that extraordinary precautions had been taken and Dr. Bell congratulated the staff on the thoroughness of the methods used.

ROOSEVELT'S PROPOSITION TURNED DOWN

Washington, Aug. 10.—Former President Roosevelt's proposition to make conservation a world-wide movement by a conference of nations is pronounced officially by the State Department to be dead. Of forty-nine Governments represented diplomatically on the Washington committee, which were invited just before the former President went out of office, to join the movement, only nineteen have replied. The answers of some of the Governments were of such a disinterested character that it was officially decided to carry the proposal no further.

GIRLS RODE ON THE BUMPERS

Belleville, Aug. 10.—Vivian Melin and Myrtle Bird, two young girls who absconded from the Children's Shelter last Thursday, were traced by H. Wrightmyer, local agent of the Children's Aid Society, to the vicinity of Campbellford, and were brought back to Belleville. They had caught a freight train and rode on the bumpers. The girls are regarded as incorrigible and will be sent to the House of Correction.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Sir Wilfrid Laurier received a rousing welcome at Edmonton.

Two boys were drowned at Golden Grove, near St. John, N.B., yesterday.

John Gentles, a well-known horseman and real estate dealer of Kincardine, is dead.

An express train struck an automobile near Cape May, N.J., and five persons were killed.

A long series of lawsuits have been entered or threatened in connection with the Milette charges in Montreal.

Joseph Rogers, superintendent of provincial police, opened an inquest at Midland into the series of recent fires there.

Chief Tremblay of the Montreal fire brigade mentions forty-five persons on account of special bravery in his report on The Herald fire.

Albert Rochon, who uncoupled a locomotive from a G.T.R. passenger train at Montreal during the strike, was sent to jail for six months.

GREATEST PARADE IN ITS HISTORY

Chicago, Aug. 10.—There began in Chicago yesterday the greatest parade of Knights Templar ever witnessed in the history of the order. Every knight attending the thirty-first triennial conclave who could get into line, was there.

The Right Hon. Henry James, Earl of Euston, cousin of King George of England, and most imminent supreme pro-grand master of the great priory of England and Wales, waited beside the line, attired in his full regalia as head of British Templary, to review the followers of the red cross. Farther on Mayor Busse was saluted and still further Governor Deneen acknowledged the tribute of flashing steel.

STICK TO PROTECTION

London, Aug. 10.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Standard says it is merely his optimism which impels Sir Wilfrid Laurier to estimate that a complete abolition of protective duties could be accomplished in two or three generations. Reading of the full reports of the Premier's speeches, The Standard sees not one trace of evidence that Canada will abandon its policy of protection and preference.

Abduction by Relatives.

Belleville, Aug. 10.—Four parties, two of them relatives of the girl, on Monday captured and took away Rosa Brooks, a 15-year-old girl, who, seven months ago, was a ward of the Children's Aid in this city, and was then found a foster home in a respectable family here.

The Children's Aid officials have begun legal proceedings to recover the girl.

Hair Drawn Into Machine.

Wandeleur, Aug. 10.—Sadie Warling, a fourteen-year-old girl, had her hair caught in a cream separator, and was drawn into the machine. The entangled hair stopped the swiftly-moving wheels, but not before she had been terribly bruised and cut. For some time after the accident she remained unconscious, and was confined to her bed.

Firebug Pleads Guilty.

Brockville, Aug. 10.—Peter Maret, the confessed fire bug, who started a blaze on Sunday in the Merrill block, which wrought great damage, appeared before Judge McDonald yesterday, pleaded guilty, and was remanded for sentence. He will likely be examined as to his sanity.

MORE NORTHERLY ROUTE SUGGESTED

Ottawa, Aug. 10.—A. W. Campbell, Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, yesterday heard the application for approval of the route map of the Canadian Northern, Calgary and Edmonton branch, to Bazeau River, through Red Deer. A portion of the line from Stewartwyn to the eastern boundary of range 25 was approved. From there on the Department asked that the railway make enquiry as to the feasibility of locating a northern route, via Lacombe, to Rocky Mountain House. In respect to the present proposed route, it was pointed out that Red Deer is already served by the Alberta Central, and a more northerly line would open up a new country.

HOMICIDE'S WIFE DEAD

Brockville, Aug. 10.—An almost direct result of the murder of Nathan Bolton by his cousin Albert Holmes near Cardinal on April 21 last was the death of the wife of the homicide, which occurred in the hospital here after a lengthy illness. Mrs. Holmes was in poor health at the time of the tragedy, which so completely unnerved her as to hurry on the end.

The news of her demise was conveyed to the husband in his cell by his only daughter and the scene was a most affecting one. Holmes, who is a physical wreck, and broods constantly over his crime, could hardly bear up under the strain.

McNULTY BLAMED

Orillia, Aug. 10.—The coroner's jury on the body of the baby found on Blackberry Island, Lake Couchiching, for the murder of which Thomas McNulty and Mary Dolan have been committed to stand their trial at Barrie in September, have handed out their verdict. They place the onus of the whole affair on McNulty and express themselves in no uncertain language.

Their verdict says in part: "We wish to express our strongest condemnation of the part taken by Thomas McNulty in the murder of the child, but recommend that all possible mercy should be shown Mary Dolan, as we are of the opinion that she was mentally deranged and not accountable for her deeds."

CANADIANS ON COMMITTEE

Minneapolis, Aug. 10.—The 56th annual convention of the International Typographical Union was called to order in Dreamland Pavilion here on Monday by President M. Lynch. Several Canadians were appointed to serve as committeemen, as follows: Committee on laws, Smith, Winnipeg; promotion of health, Brown, Calgary; Typographical Journal, Uren, Saskatoon; officers' reports, Youhill, Vancouver; label, Bell, Montreal; miscellaneous business, Stevenson, Toronto.

Almost Upset Hearse.

London, Aug. 10.—A dramatic incident occurred at the funeral of the late Silas James Lucas of Crampton, when a horse belonging to Mr. Binkley of Avon, ran away in the procession, smashed the vehicle and, getting into the ditch, ran along, setting the whole funeral procession in confusion. The runaway in its flight grazed the hearse and almost upset it.

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 10, 1910.

SHALL WE PAVE GEORGE STREET

The proposition to pave parts of George and Charlotte streets is before the people and in a formal way the City Council has given notice of the intention to take up and possibly go on and do something in the matter. It is one that has been set offrom time to time, that as while desirable, might be left to the future. It is now proposed to take the question up as one necessitated by the state of the streets and as compatible with business, growth and increasing imporance.

Public opinion, which is after all only the opinions of individuals in the aggregate is divided. Those who will hav to pay fargely for the improvement, are those who are said to be largely benefitted, viz., the merchants. That part of the general public who will pay through a general rate will not feel the expense nearly so severely. Hence opinion is expressed in direct relation as to the expense to be borne by the individual. It is proposed there shall be two rates—or two divisions of one rate. Sixty per cent. to be borne by the properties fronting on the paved area. Forty per cent. to be paid by a general rate, or by the municipality as a whole. This seems fairly equitable until it is examined closely as to its direct bearing on the tax schedule.

Roughly speaking it is proposed to pave from McDonnel street to the C. P.R. crossing on George street, and from George street to Bethune street on Charlotte street. This includes nine blocks on George street and two blocks on Charlotte street, making in all about twelve average blocks, that from George street to Aylmer being a very long block. Of this distance twelve intersections, or the crossings of streets, a distance of 700 feet, would be charged in the general rate as well as forty per cent. as proposed. It has been estimated that the total cost of excavation, laying a concrete bottom, laying the blocks or pavement and finishing of the work will cost about $70,000, or pretty nearly $5,500 per block, including the street intersections. The money would have to be raised by debentures, at a cost to the municipality of over $3,000 per year for interest, and nearly as much for sinking fund. Can the city stand it? Can the ratepayers pay it?

Let is see how it works out, in a general way, without going into an absolutely accurate calculation. Take the case of a property owner on Charlotte street, who owns a fifty foot frontage on each side of the street. There would be assessed against the property a tax of about 50c. per foot, of the special rate, or $50 per year. When the share of the general rate and intersections is added it will equal another 50c. and so the property tax would be raised nearly $100 per year. That is a serious advance, and the benefit to the property is not easy to determine the expense in dollars and cets. And this tax will be levied for the ensuing thirty years.

When George street is considered the matter is additionally serious, not for the owners but for the tenants. The property on George street—referring to the business section—is largely held by one company. These owners would be quite willing to have the street paved at the expense of the tenants. It would not be at the expense of the property, for as now, the tenants pay the taxes, the additional tax would fall on the tenant. If the owners would arrange to pay the expense and not have it form an addition to the taxes, merchants would be willing to have the street paved. As it is they say they are already overburdened with a very high rental, but no matter what that may be, it seems that others would be willing to pay to occupy the same premises. The merchant views with dismay the proposition to clap on him a special rate of 50c. per foot, a share of the general rate and a share of the sinking fund. Were George street lined with stores the whole distance it would be fairly feasible.

It would seem that the paving scheme had better be deferred for posterity to grapple with. Posterity hasn't as yet done anything for us and should have a chance for an innings. Pavements come high, for of the George street frontage a whole lot is exempt, a further lot is city property and this will infallibly add to the general rate. If the City Council are well advised, there is a way out of the difficulty and that is this.

It will cost the city $100,000 by the time the pavement is paid for. In thirty years it will be worn out, so that we are going to pay about $3,500 per year for our blocks, and it will take about $2,000 per year additional to sweep it and keep it clean. Having pavements entail cleanliness and neatness. That fact cannot be dodged. Take the sections mentioned, go at the work and do it thoroughly, put the street in first-class order with good broken stone. Then spend $1,000 each year for material, and go back to the old fashioned English way, of mending each hole when the street shows signs of wear. The whole cost of upkeep will not approach one-half of that of pavement and for all practical purposes will give us a very satisfactory and durable street surface. Keeping at it is the only way. Letting the surface of the street degenerate until it is absolutely bad is not only expensive but wrong. Another thing to be considered and this may be put in the form of a question. Why is it necessary that the corporation teams, drawing heavy loads of gravel and material, most destructive to a good road bed, have to travel day after day, the length of George street. The narrow-tired wheel, with heavy loads do more over the sprinkled roadbed to destroy it than any other traffic. All this hauling should be, as far as practible, done on the side streets.

SIDE LIGHTS

SUCCESS.

I'd rather fail than have it said
  I won by lying or deceit;
I want no laurel round my head
  If winning it I have to cheat.

I'd rather have the public jeer
  And call me quitter, coward—yes,
I'd rather stand to see them sneer
  Than fraudulently gain success.

For winning isn't all of life,
  Success is stamped upon the soul,
I'd rather falter in the strife
  Than cunningly attain my goal.

SCRIPTURAL AUTHORITY FOR IT.
(Galt Reporter.)

One of our citizens who occasionally wipes the dishes for his wife, became tired of the job and refused, saying that "it is not a man's work." Not feeling disposed to lose his help she brought the Bible out to convince him of his error and read as follows, from II Kings, 21-13: "And will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish wiping it and turning it upside down." It is needless to say that he is still doing his occasional stunt.

SEX INEQUALITY.
(Atchison Globe.)

It doesn't cost much to get a man ready to be married. He buys a new suit of clothes, two suits of underthree extra pairs of socks, has his hair cut, and is ready. But think of the stuff a girl thinks she must buy when she gets married! Are girls so superior to men that they cannot get married without fifteen or twenty times more clothes?

JOHN BEAT IT.
The Club.

The big man put on his red slippers, lit his meerschaum and opened his afternoon paper.

"H'm," he soliloquoized, glancing over the foreign news. "If I was the president of Nicaragua I'd put down these puny uprisings they have every day or so."

Then he turned to the sporting page.

"And if I was Jim Jeffries I'd put down all these reports about being a has-been."

The next page was the news from Washington.

"And if I happened to be Bill Taft I'd put down the trusts in short order."

Just then his wife came in with a tiny hammer and a box of tacks.

"John," she chirped, "as long as you are getting so anxious to put something down suppose you take this hammer and box of tacks and put the matting down."

But John beat it to the club.

Excursion Steamer Wrecked.

Vancouver, Aug. 8.—The steamer Seichelt, a small excursion boat running between Vancouver and points forty miles up the coast, was wrecked yesterday morning at two o'clock in Vancouver first narrows, at the point where the sister steamer Beaver was lost a quarter of a century ago. The Seichelt was passing Prospect Point in a thick fog and swung around in the tide, striking the rocks.

A dozen dozing passengers immediately began breaking the windows of the cabin, trying to climb to safety, and this commotion attracted the attention of the lighthouse keeper at the Point, only a few yards distant. He launched a lifeboat, and, making three trips between the steamer and the shore, easily rescued all the passengers. The boat stuck fast, and the life of no one was in danger at any time. Her engineroom fire being drawn, the live coals set fire to the engineroom woodwork, but this was extinguished at 3 o'clock. The vessel will probably be raised to-night.

Struck by Donkey Engine.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Aug. 8.—While working on the lower river bank, near the Ontario Power Co.'s power house Saturday night, Andrew Hendershot, a carpenter, was so badly injured that he is not expected to live. He was walking along the track when a donkey engine struck him, crushing his left ankle and inflicting a severe wound on the head.

Killed by a Grain Beard.

Ottawa, Aug. 8.—A young man working on a farm at Carp, while bundling barley, got a piece of the grain beard in his threat. As it pained him, he came to Ottawa, and it was taken out. Yesterday morning he was seized with a fit of coughing, and died of the hemorrhage at the hospital.

Four Christian Endeavor societies, of Fairbury, Neb., are sending a request to Mrs. Nicholas Longworth to give up cigarettes.

Give the Family Income a Chance

Perhaps the family income is big enough after all.

Perhaps the reason it does not seem to go as far as it should is because you do not spend it thriftily enough.

Perhaps when you buy, you do not go to the right stores at the right time.

If you read the store advertisements regularly you will soon see ways of stretching your dollars.

You will soon learn where to go for this and where to buy that.

You will soon be giving your "expense money" a chance to buy you the things you now need and other things that a little surplus money might make you think you need—

But which you cannot now afford.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

There was little sleep for him that night, and in the morning the first thing he did was to pick up the wineglass. It was all true. And then his good resolutions melted and vanished. He must have one more word with her, happen what might. So at 10 o'clock he called a cab and drove rapidly to the Sandford place. Snow had fallen during the night, and many of the steps were still spotless white. Impossible! He leaned from the cab and rubbed his eyes. Absolutely impossible! For what did he see? Wooden shutters over all the lower windows and the iron gates closed before the doors! And not a footprint anywhere. This was extraordinary. He jumped from the cab, ran up the steps and rang the bell—rang it ten times with minute intervals. And no one answered. Then he heard a call from across the street. A man stood in one of the areaways.

"Nobody home!" he shouted. "Gone to Egypt."

"But there was some one here last night," Hillard shouted back.

"Dreaming. That house has been empty since November. I happen to be the caretaker."

Hillard went back to his cab dazed. No one there last night? Come, come; there was a mistake somewhere. He would soon find out whether or not he had dined there the night before.

"A cable office!" he cried to the cabby. "Hurry!"

Once there he telephoned downtown and secured Sandford's cable address. Then he filled out a blank, which cost him $10. Late that night at the club he received his reply. It was terse—

You are crazy. House absolutely empty.
SANDFORD.

CHAPTER VII.

THE TOSS OF A COIN.

HILLARD made an inexcusably careless shot. He grounded his cue and stood back from the table. That was the way everything seemed to go—at tennis, at squash, at fencing, at billiards, it was all the same.

"I say, Jack, what's the matter with you anyhow?" asked Merrihew, out of patience.

"It was bad," Hillard agreed. "Perhaps I am not taking the interest in the game that I formerly took."

"And when I make a proposition," pursued Merrihew, "to ride to the Catskills and back, something you would have jumped at a year ago, you shake your head. Think of it! By George, you had a bully time last year! You swore it was the best trip we ever took on the horses. Where's your spirit of adventure?"

"I'm sure I don't know where it is. Shall we finish the game?"

"Not if you're going to throw it like this," declared Merrihew.

"Ten and a string against your half a string," said Hillard, studying the score. "I'll bet a bottle that I beat you."

"Done!" said Merrihew. Being on his mettle, he made a clean score of twenty, five to go. "I can see you paying for that check, Jack."

But the odds tingled Hillard's blood. He settled down to a brilliant play and turned sixty-one in beautiful form.

Later the two passed upstairs to the secluded alcove. Merrihew filled the glasses with the air of one who would like to pass the remainder of his days doing the same thing—not that he was overfond, but each bottle temporarily weeded out that crop of imperishable debts. To him the world grew roseate and kindly viewed through the press of the sparkling grape, and invariably he saw fortune beckoning to the card tables.

"Now, then, Jack. I've got you where I want you. Who is she?"

"On my word, I don't know."

"Then there is a woman!" cried Merrihew. "I knew it. Nothing else would so demoralize you. Drink a health to her."

Hillard raised his glass and touched that of his comrade. For the peace of his mind he determined to tell Merrihew the whole adventure.

"To the lady in the fog!" he said.

"Fog?" blankly.

"Well, the lady in the mask."

"Fog, mask? Two of them?"

"No, only one. Once I met her in the fog, and then I met her in the mask."

"I'll drink to her, but I'm hanged if I don't believe you're coddling me," said Merrihew disappointedly. "This is New York."

"The whole story, Jack, details and all; no half portions."

Hillard told the yarn simply, omitting nothing essential. He even added that for three weeks he had been the author of the personal inquiry as to the whereabouts of one Mme. Angot.

"I don't know, Dan, but this has taken so strong a hold on me that I shan't forget it soon. Imagine it yourself. Oh, but she could sing! I am a man not to be held in the leash of an adventure like this, but she held me. How? By the hope that one day I might see her face with no veil of mystery to hold her off at arm's length."

Merrihew was greatly excited. He was for ordering a second bottle, but Hillard stayed him.

"By George! And you are sure that it was at the Sandfords'?"

"I am positive. But there is a puzzle that I have failed to solve—Sandford's cable and the caretaker's declaration. I know that I was in that house. The patrolman says that he has seen no light in the house since the family sailed for Africa. It is no dream, but it begins to look as if I were the victim of some fine hoax."

"It is more than a hoax, in my opinion. Wait till Sandford returns and finds his silver gone."

Hillard started.

"And his gold plate," continued Merrihew, pleased with the idea. "My boy, that's what it is—the best dodge I ever heard of. It will make a good story for the Sunday papers. You won't be in it unless she ropes you in as an accomplice."

"I'm a romantic ass!" Hillard sighed. Leddy Lightfinger! If this turned out to be the case he would never trust a human being again.

"Let's take that ride on the horses," Merrihew urged. "That'll clear your brain of this sentimental fog."

"No!" Hillard struck his hands together. "I've a better idea than that. I shall go to Italy, and you shall go with me."

"Impossible. Why, I'm all but broke."

"I'll take you as a companion. I'm a sick man, Dan. I'm likely to jump overboard if some one isn't watching me every minute."

"I'd like to go, Jack. Heaven and earth, but I should! But I can't possibly go to Italy with a letter of credit no more than twenty-five hundred, and that's all there is in the exchequer at present."

"Between such friends as we are"—

"That racket won't work. I could not take a moment's peace if I did not feel independent."

"But I'm not going to give it to you," Hillard protested. "I am going to lend it to you."

"And could I ever pay you back if I accepted the loan?" humorously.

"There's Monte Carlo. You might pull down a tidy sum," said the tempter.

"That's the way, you beggar. Hit me on the soft side." But Merrihew was still obdurate.

"Now, listen to reason, Dan. If you wait for the opportunity to go to Europe you'll wait in vain. You must make the opportunity. One must have youth to enjoy Italy thoroughly. The desire to go becomes less and less as one grows older. Besides, it completes every man's education. I'll put the proposition in a way you can't possibly get round. You will always have that thousand, so don't worry about that. You have twenty-five hundred on hand, you say. With that you can see Italy like a prince for three months."

A scar ran from his cheek to his chin.

"What's the proposition?" Merrihew drained the bottle.

"This—I'll agree to take not a penny more than twenty-five hundred myself. We'll go on equal terms. Why," confidently, "besides living like a prince you'll have four hundred to throw away at roulette. Boy, you have never seen Italy; therefore you do not know what beauty is. When we eventually land at Bellagio, on Lake Como, and I take your lily white hand in mine and lead you up to the terrace of Villa Serbelloni and order tea, then you will realize that you have only begun to live—gardens, towering Alps, the green Lecco on one side and the green Como on the other and Swiss champagne at $1.40 the quart! Eh?

"And then," Hillard added, "there's Kitty Killigrew singing her heart out to a people who can't understand a word she's singing."

"Can it be done for twenty-five hundred?"

Merrihew chewed his cigar with subdued fierceness. He knew very well that he was destined to go to Europe. Kitty Killigrew, who had promised to mail the route they were to play and hadn't!

"It is written, Dan, that you shall go with me."

"We'll settle this argument right here now." Merrihew drew out a coin. "Call it," he cried recklessly.

"Heads!"

The coin flickered in the light, fell and proved that all money is perverse by rolling under the davenport upon which they were sitting. An amusing hunt followed. They ran their hands over the floor, turned the rug, pulled out the davenport and looked behind, burned innumerable matches and finally rang for the attendant. The situation was explained, and he procured a candle. He was ultimately successful.

"Here it is, sir."

"What is it, head or tail?" asked Merrihew weakly.

"Head, sir," said the attendant.

"Keep it," said Merrihew generously, even sadly. He never got up a game of chance that he did not get the worst of it. And now, Italy! All that way from home! "Boy, bring up a bottle of '96."

"And the lady in the mask?" asked Merrihew as they at length stood up.

"I must relegate her to the fog she came out of. But it would be a frightful thing if—if"— He hesitated to form the words.

But Merrihew had no such scruple. "If the silver and plate were missing when the Sandfords return?"

"Oh, bosh! It's all some joke, and I'm the butt of it. She was in that house by the same authority she rode the horse."

"A woman of that sort would have no difficulty in hoodwinking the stablemen," declared Merrihew.

"By the way," he continued, "received a postal from Kitty this morning from Gibraltar. 'Fine trip. Visited the gun galleries and the antique furniture shops. Says no sign of prima donna as yet, but believes her to be on board. O'Mally's on the water wagon.' But Kitty aggravates me."

"What has she done now, refused you by marconigraph?"

"No, but she promised me her address."

"Address her care Cook's, Florence, Rome, Venice. It's the popular mail box of Europe, and if she has given them the address they will forward."

"That helps considerably. I'm glad there's one Cook which can be relied on."

"In the morning I'll arrange for passage. We'll try the Celtic."

"I'll leave the business end of the trip to you."

"The first Saturday in March, then, if we can get booking. That will be in less than two weeks."

In the lobby of the club as they were about to enter the coat room Hillard ran into one of several gentlemen issuing.

"Pardon me," he said, stepping aside.

"Non importa!" said the stranger, with a graceful wave of the hands.

Hillard looked quickly into the gentleman's face. "I am clumsy," he said in Italian.

Then the other stared at him and smiled. For a moment there was a brief tableau, in which each took the other's measure and noted the color of the eyes. The man was an exceedingly handsome Italian, for all that a scar ran from his cheek to his chin. It was all over in a moment, and Hillard and Merrihew proceeded to the street.

"Handsome duffer," was Merrihew's comment. "But you never can tell a man by his looks. Gaze on me, for instance."

"Go home!" Hillard slapped him jovially on the shoulder.

"Home! Ah, yes! But shall I have a home to go to when I get back? You have roped me in nicely. My poor little twenty-five hundred! But Swiss champagne at $1.40 the quart! Well, every cloud has its lining."

As Hillard never received any answer to his personal, he discontinued it. Truly, she had returned to the fog out of which she had come. But it was no less difficult for him to take up the daily affairs again. What mystery veiled her? Whither had she gone?

Giovanni was delighted when he heard the news. He would go, too, and act as valet to the signor and his friend till they put out for Rome. Then, of course, he would be obliged to leave them. Occasionally Hillard would reason with him regarding his deadly projects. But when a Latin declares that he has seen through blood, persuasions, arguments, entreaties, threats do not prevail. He comforted himself with the opinion, however, that Giovanni's hunt would come to no successful end.

"You will surely fall into the hands of the police."

"What God wills comes true. But by this time they will have forgotten me."

"But your man might be dead."

"He is not dead. If he were something would tell me."

"It is a bad business, and I wish you no luck."

Giovanni smiled easily. Wishes seldom interfere with any one.

"I will double your wages," said Hillard, "if you will go where I go and return with me when I come back to America."

A deprecating movement. "Money? It is nothing. I am rich after my kind."

WEDDING BELLS

PRICE—ELLIOTT.

The home of Mr. J. W. Elliott, 53 Olive avenue, was the scene of a very charming wedding at two o'clock this afternoon, when Miss Viola Elliott and Mr. James Price were joined in holy wedlock by the Rev. H. R. Trumpour.

To the strains of the wedding march played by Miss Sisson, of Cavanville, the bride entered the parlor leaning on the arm of her father. She looked very charming and attractive in a gown of silk mull, trimmed with baby Irish lace.

Miss Mabel Price, sister of the groom, also looked pretty in a beautiful gown of silk crepe-de-chene. The ceremony was performed under a bridal arch of palms and evergreens, the combination being particularly pleasing and blending well.

Mr. Vincent Elliott, brother of the bride, fulfilled the duties of best man.

The two little flower girls were Erma and Myrtle O'Neil.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, all the guests about sixty in number, partook of an inviting and sumptuous repast.

Mr. and Mrs. Price leave this evening for Ottawa. They will be absent a week, and on their return will reside at 59 Olive avenue.

The bride's travelling suit was of navy blue serge with black picture hat.

Many out-of-town guests were present, some of whom were Miss King, of Lorneville; Miss Watt, of Toronto; Mr. Elliott and the Misses Sisson, of Cavanville, Miss Akey, of Webbwood and Mrs. Teriff, of Weston.

An Unfamiliar Alias.

There may be nothing in a name, but the American traveler of whom the Living Church tells found at least confusion therein. He had landed at Liverpool and hastened out of the city to a rural village, where he found a charmingly old fashioned inn which delighted his soul. It was late when he arrived, and when he asked what he could have for supper the buxom landlady suggested minced collops. He agreed with enthusiasm, the dish sounded so romantic, so Robin Hoodsy, so almost mediaeval. And what do you suppose they brought him? Just plain hash!

ATE TOADSTOOLS AND ARE DEAD

Poisoned to death by eating toadstools in mistake for mushrooms, was the fate of the two children of Mr. Raymond Kingsbury, of Rochester, and their grandmother, Mrs. Hannah Kingsbury, was also poisoned from the same cause.

Mr. Roy Kingsbury, the well known local plumber, who is a near relative of the parties concerned, received the first intelligence of the tragic event at noon to-day through the medium of a Rochester newspaper mailed to him by his brother.

It appears that the grandfather of the two children, whose ages are three years and fifteen months, respectively, while on his way home from work plucked some toad-stools from the roadside, mistaking them for mushrooms.

Theys were eaten on Saturday morning but no ill effects were felt until two o'clock in the afternoon when the two children were seized with violent vomiting and died a little later despite the aid of medical skill.

Mrs. Hannah Kingsbury is fifty-five years of age and has probably succumbed by this time.

Mr. Kingsbury was terribly shocked to hear the sudden and terrible tidings.

IS THE GOOSE THAT LAID GOLDEN EGG NO LONGER HEROINE OF MERE FABLE?

If the reported facts are right, this farmer apparently thinks he has lost the goose that lays the golden egg.

The story runs thusly according to reliable authority;

Last Sunday a couple of young men while paddling on the river confiscated for their own use one of a flock of geese that were assembled in a holiday float. The owner of the goose apparently witnessed the unconventional appropriation for he stood on the shore a short distance from the scene of the tragedy—for the goose was killed—with a rifle in his hand and invited one of the principals in the affair, who had paddled up singlehanded in the meantime, and when he did so the irate one asked for an explanation and talked forcibly of prosecution. Four or five other dwellers of the mainland joined the little shore party and expressed their indignation.

Later one of the two accused wanted to square the matter up by giving the owner of the goose three dollars but the latter said it would cost the pair fifty dollars to settle the matter. The couldn't hear this latter appeal however, and at the time of going to press it had not been learned if any settlement had been effected.

SEIZED WITH CONVULSIONS WHILE BOATING ON RIVER

A series of minor adventures, none of them specially startling, however, and yet startling enough to cause alarm to all concerned, were enacted on the Otonabee river late Sunday evening. For some time before the real facts were learned, campers in the neighborhood feared that some one had met a watery grave.

Alderman Wm. Buller and five other gentlemen played a prominent part in the events.

It appears that the launch in which these gentlemen were, ran out of gasoline at Robinson's Island. The boat was left there while the occupants went back and got a punt to tow itback to their camp. Everything was going along smoothly and the launch was being leisurely towed back, when the piercing cries of a woman assailed their ears. It was pitch dark and the spot from where the cries emanated was not discernible. The cries of "stop that gasoline yacht," "stop that yacht" continued. Quickly cutting loose from the launch, that was in tow the occupants of the punt rowed rapidly in the direction of the cries. At the same time a launch containing the Greer party also was found to be approaching the same direction.

The punt reached the scene first, and beheld a skiff containing a woman and two men. One of the men was holding the other down in the bottom of the boat and appeared to be struggling with him, while the woman sat in the stern and uttering the cries which had attracted notice first. The punt drew up close to the skiff and the woman explained that their companion had been suddenly stricken with a fit of some kind and his contortions and violent movements had threatened to upset the boat.

The man was finally quieted enough and the occupants of the punt left him in charge of the party on the Greer launch.

The Buller party went back after their launch and found that it had drifted in among the weeds and was easily found again.

While the incident did not amount to much, still it was alarming enough at the time, the impenetrable darkness making it impossible to distinguish anything on the water at the time.

MIDLAND FIREMEN WERE WELCOMED TO PETEEBORO'

The city's population to-day was increased by between four and five hundred visitors, who arrived here from Midland at 10.30 this morning.

The excursion was under the auspices of the Midland firemen. They were accompanied by the I.O.F. band of that city, who attracted considerable attention while marching up George street at noon to-day. The visitors all remained in the city viewing the sights and places of interest. Nearly all were distinguishable by their badges.

They were met at the station by Ald. Phelan, chairman of the Reception Committee, and Fire Chief Howard, who welcomed them to the city. Little booklets were distributed to the visitors descriptive of Peterborough and which will be probably carried away as souvenirs.

They return home at 8 o'clock this evening.

SAID GOODBYE TO JIMMIE

Last evening the baseball team of the Total Abstinence Society and many who were their zealous supporters throughout the year, gathered in the gymnasium of their club rooms to bid farewell to a true sport and a real baseball player, who left this morning for Pittsburg, namely, Mr. James Callaghan, the T.A.S. third baseman, but better known to his associates as "Batler," about which many parodies are composed and sung by the club. Mr. Callaghan, the pinch hit specialist, has been connected with the T.A.S. baseball team for many years and whether it was that Jimmie knew he was to leave or not it makes little difference, but this year he made a phenomenal hit with his good batting and the excellent all round ball playing. A most enjoyable time was spent at the rooms, and the following programme was given;

Piano selections, W. O'Brien.

Recitation, Casey at the bat (localized) J. J. Dorris.

Song, W. Cahill.

Step dance, J. Callaghan and S. Holihan.

Songs, ("Bearman and "Batler") Base ball team.

Step dance, S. Hoolihan.

Song, Jas. Callaghan.

Speech, Mr. J. J. Hickey, President.

Mr. Hickey made a few remarks, explaining the reason why the assemblage was held and called upon Mr. J. J. Dorris to read the address.

Mr. Dorris read the following address and Mr. A. J. Quinlan presented his colleague with a handsome brass mounted suitcase, as a remembrance of the T.A.S. baseball team of 1910.

Peterborough, August 9th, 1910.

Mr. James Callaghan, alias John Evers, Premier Third Sacker, Senior City League;—

Dear Jimmie,—It is with mingled feelings of joy and sorrow that we, your chums in the good old baseball game, gather around you this evening to show in some tangible form our deep appreciation of your work and worth on the diamond, and to bid you God speed in your journey to the "smoky" city. The ball team, in particular, loses one of its strongest players and one who at all times gave his best efforts to further the interests of the green and white on the diamond, and could always be relied upon to play the game at any and at all times. We assure you that we appreciate greatly what you have done for us, and how you have always been eager and willing to help us annex another championship, and, while we feel sorry, indeed, this evening to have to bid you a fond farewell, we wish you every success in your new field of labor and social prestige, and trust you will ever remember that over here in this good old city of Peterborough, you have left behind friends who will watch with interest your career in the "smoky" city, both in your line of work and on the ball field.

We cannot let this occasion pass without showing more tangibly than by a flow of words our kindly feelings towards you, and for that reason we ask you to accept this little remembrance in the spirit in which it is given, and should you at any time decide to come home, you may be sure we will be here to await you and have a place on the team ready for you, who will be always known to us as "the kid who could lay them on."

Signed on behalf of the boys:
J. J. HICKEY, President.
JAMES J. DORIS, Sec.-Treas.
A. J. QUINLAN, Manager.

Mr. Callaghan made a suitable reply and assured his fellow players that their names would always be uppermost in his mind, and he would remember that Peterborough players showed him the game.

With one spontaneous outburst of warm and friendly emotion, awakened by the many favors received from Jimmie, all present sang, "He's a jolly good fellow."

From the T.A.S. rooms the baseball teams and guests went to the Chinese Cafe where a sumptuous supper was prepared. After the meal was partaken of Mr. W. O'Brien made a short speech, in which he wished Mr. Callaghan every success in his new field of enterprise.

The evening was brought to a close by the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

"GOLDEN SMILE" BALKS AT BILL FOR BRONZE BUST

New York, August 3.—Cartaino Sciarrino, an Italian sculptor, residing here, refused to believe in the sincerity of Heavyweight Champion Jack Johnson's reputed "golden smile." As a result Sciarrino has instituted a suit of $4,000 against the ebony champion. When John J. Freschi, attorney for the clay caster, went to Baron Wilkins's resort to serve the title holder with a warrant it was discovered that the black bird had flown. 'Tis said that Johnson made for Atlantic City when he learned that trouble was in store for him.

Sciarrino's claim for the amount he seeks, the sculptor claims, is due him for making a bust in bronze of the bronzed champion. Johnson was so eager for a cast of himself that he spent several hours of each day for several weeks in posing for the sculptor.

Big Jack always came to the studio with an escort of three or four huskies. This bodyguard always attended Johnson in his journeys, for the big black still has a premonition that some one is intent on doing him bodily harm.

LOSES FIGHT WITH DEATH

The Passing of Joe Gans the Baltimore Negro Lightweight, Consumption the Cause

Special to the Review.

Baltimore, Aug. 10.—Joe Gans, ex-champion lightweight of the world, died here this morning at the home of his foster parents, Mr. and Mrs. Gans, following a brave battle for months against tuberculosis.

Gans was 36 years old.

BALL RESULTS

Big pitching feats were the order in the [illegible] of Buffalo, shut out Jersey City without a hit or run. Russell, of Baltimore, blanked Montreal, allowing only one hit, and Lee, of Newark, held Toronto to two hits and no score. Baltimore and Montreal broke even in a doubleheader, and Rochester lost to Providence 2 to 1, and fell back into second place. Philadelphia won the first game of the season at Detroit. New York won and lost at St. Louis, Ford won his game. Boston outbatted Chicago, but lost 7 to 4. In the National New York trimmed St. Louis and Pittsburg shut out Boston. Philadelphia and Chicago divided the honors in a double-header. Cincinnati took two games from Brooklyn.

TAR BABY AND MR. KAUFMAN

Philadelphia, Aug. 9.—Al Kaufman, the burly Californian, and Sam Langford, the Boston negro, the bugaboo of all middleweights, will cross arms in a six-round bout to-morrow night at the Philadelphia National League ball park. Harry Edwards, manager of the National A.C., of the Quaker City, is responsible for getting the men together, giving the men their choice of a $5,000 purse or an option on the receipts. The baseball enclosure will seat close to thirty thousand, and the prices range from $1 to $3.

The bout is causing much speculation all over the country. Gothamites especially are interested in the outcome, for the winner will, in all probability, get first crack at Johnson. Langford has declared that he will hound Big Jack when the latter sets sail for the other side, but the Boston boxer must first dispose of Kaufman in convincing style before he can hope to tackle Johnson.

Kaufman will have a chance to show how much he has improved since he last performed in the east. Kaufman has been benefited by training with Johnson for the latter's fight with Jeffries. Johnson taught Kaufman a few tricks of the trade, and the big German says he will use them against the stalky negro to-morrow night.

Sam is confident that he can put Kaufman away inside the limit, while Kaufman expressed the same view, except that Langford will be the one to seek the shelter of the carpet.

Never too Old to Earn

How much does Bob Fitzsimmons get for his vaudeville sketch?

One thing is certain, he receives between $500 and $1,000 a week.

While he maintains that it was not his privilege to tell, E. Clark Walker, local manager of the Pantages Theatre, admitted that Fitz receives $150 more now than when he was around this way before. Six hundred and fifty per week is said to be the correct amount.

Fitz seems to be one man whose services increase with age. He says that when he and Mrs. Fitsimmons go on the boards in the new sketch now being written for them by Jack London, he expects to draw down from $1,500 to $2,000 per week.

BYRON AND THE BALLOON.

How the Poet In 1822 Predicted the Airship of Today.

Those who have read the fiction of Edgar Allan Poe will recall his wonderful story of the balloon with a propelling rudder, which, crossing the Atlantic from Europe in three days, landed on the coast of South Carolina. This story was published in 1838, preceding the flight of Bleriot from Calais to Dover more than seventy years. And now it is remarked that as early as 1822, sixteen years before Poe, Byron foretold the motor.

It was in 1822 that Byron lived at Pisa, Italy, where he had rented for a year the Lanfranchie palace, and it was there that he entertained a Captain Medwin, who on his return to London published his "Conversations With Lord Byron." One of these conversations is to this effect:

"Who can but regret," said Byron, "that he has been born two or three hundred years too soon. Here is a letter from a savant of Bologna who claims to have discovered the secret of guiding balloons by means of a rudder and who assures me that he is ready to disclose this secret to the government. I imagine that we are soon to make journeys through the air instead of sea voyages, at last to find a way to go to the moon despite the lack of atmosphere that Fontanelle has discovered there. There is not as much madness in this idea as one may suppose. The sciences are now in their infancy."

Medwin left Pisa in March, 1822. It was near the close of that year that Byron published the latter parts of his "Don Juan," in which the poet shows that he had been inspired by the discovery of the Bologna savant. See the second stanza of the tenth canto:

Man fell with apples and with apples rose,
If this be true, for we must deem the mode
In which Sir Isaac Newton could disclose
Through the then [illegible] stars the turnpike road,
A thing to counterbalance human woes,
For ever since immortal man hath glowed
With all kinds of mechanics, and full soon
Steam engines will conduct him to the moon.

Byron's "Don Juan" was translated into French by Amedee Pichot in 1825; but, daring as was that translator, he did not venture to put "Don Juan" into rhyme, and today the foregoing stanza done in French prose is supposed to be a prediction of aviation by motor, though Byron's suggestion goes no further.—London Globe.

Bread In Sweden.

In Sweden the bread of the people is for the most part hard, thin as a dinner plate and about the size of one. It is baked without yeast, and the water is practically all extracted in the process of baking; hence, relatively per pound of bread, its cost is much higher than in the common forms of bread as we know them, containing one-half their weight in water that has cost nothing. Loaf bread and rolls in Sweden are a luxury.

Anniversary of Pope's Coronation.

Rome, Aug. 10.—The seventh anniversary of the coronation of Pope Pius was celebrated yesterday with imposants, without and evasion, equivocation. All the members of the Sacred College, the papal court, heads of religious orders, members of the diplomatic corps, and prominent representatives of the Roman aristocracy were present.

Complete In Three Years.

Edmonton, Alta., Aug. 10.—D. D. Mann, vice-president of the Canadian Northern Railway, passed through Lashburn Monday night, returning from British Columbia. Word was gleaned that the mountain section is to be completed in three years and that the Superior division, from Seliwood, will be under contract immediately.

Wall Paper.

In these days of simplicity of furniture, when the painfully twisted shapes and dust catching whatnots are relegated to the oblivion of the attic, there is greater opportunity for the decoration of the walls of a room.

When it is brought to mind how much of the wall space of a room is evident it is necessary that due consideration be given to the selection of paper. The pattern should not be such that the harmonious furnishings of a room are lost in the dominating of color or design of the background.

Plain paper of neutral tones or indistinct striped paper is the most desirable. Nothing is more execrable in taste than the glaring huge flower forms that pain the eye and hang in questionable glory (that never seems to fade) on the four walls of a room.

A plain lower portion of burlap or Japanese grass cloth or even linen is excellent as a relief from the patterned paper above. The tapestry tones give wide choice for the lower plain band and are procurable in really artistic combinations.

One decorator suggests a study of a Persian rug for inspiration in the selection of colors for wall decoration.

A Fatal Fire In New Town.

Kindersley, Sask., Aug. 10.—Fire, which broke out shortly after midnight in Lynn's restaurant, caused the death of the proprietor, J. C. Lynn, who perished in an effort to save a child, whom he thought had not been got out. The restaurant and I. E. Hahn's gent's furnishings store were totally destroyed, and only the hard efforts of citizens saved further loss.

Railway Heads at Stratford.

Stratford, Aug. 10.—President Hays and the chairman of the board of directors, A. W. Smithers, of the G.T.R., and party arrived here last evening. An inspection of the company's big shops and other premises will occupy their attention in the morning, after which they will proceed to Sarnia, to take boat for Fort William.

Disobedience Caused Wreck.

Ignacio, Cal., Aug. 10—Disobedience of orders, according to the railroad officials, on the part of a conductor was responsible for a head-on collision between a passenger and a freight train on the Northwest Pacific last Monday night, that took a known toll of 11 lives and resulted in the injury of about 20.

If a moderately stiff spring be attached between the handle and back of a floor brush it will shake the dust from the brush at the end of every stroke.

"SHOWERING" THE BRIDE.

Pretty Ways of Presenting Her With Prenuptial Gifts.

"Shower" parties for a bride to be are great fun both for the prospective bride and for the girl friends who give them. Still, there is likely to be a shade of embarrassment about the occasion, as there so often is when gifts are presented and received, unless some pretty foolery is devised to swallow up the bride's gratitude in laughter. At one very successful linen "shower" which happened not long ago the guests as they arrived deposited their gifts for the bride elect in an immense hollow wedding bell of orange blossoms, which was hung between the doors that separated the two parlors. The guest of honor, by the way, was invited for an hour a trifle later than that named for the others, so all the gifts were safely in the receptacle, out of sight, when she arrived.

After luncheon, when every one was assembled in the parlor, the hostess put the end of a long white satin streamer which hung from the bell into the bride elect's hand and asked her to give a good stiff pull. Out came a veritable shower of pretty handmade garments, burying the bride in filmy white, and amid the laughter and the scrambling to pick things up the bride's thanks and exclamations of delight couldn't possibly embarrass the givers.

Another good idea is to secrete the gifts in unexpected places about the house. Then after luncheon the bride and her friends have a hunt for them. It is as much fun as the game of "hide the thimble"—more, if the hostess will take the trouble to label each gift with a bit of quaint advice or some fun provoking motto. One woman whose home boasts a billiard room led the guests at a party she was giving in honor of a bride elect upstairs to this apartment. There on the table, upside down, were a number of plates, each with some absurd counsel for young "Newlyweds" on its back. The bride to be was commanded to read all this aloud before turning the plates, but when she had done this there were revealed twelve exquisite hand painted plates, each given by one of the guests.

A "traveler's luncheon," where the gifts are offered in miniature grips, suit cases and hat boxes, is nice for an engaged girl if she expects to spend her honeymoon traveling, as many people do.

Laying Out a Garden.

In the new garden the making of a walk is as much a matter of study and care as the sidewalk in front of the house. There is nothing so good for this purpose as concrete, but where the expense of that ideal material is too great there can be substituted brick, flagstone, cobbles, pebbles or limestone screenings, says the Delineator for March. The walk should be the only formal stiff feature about the well planned home garden, and time, with the growth of the foliage along its sides, will cure that to a great extent.

The walk should "lead from somewhere to something." It should have a purpose, which is primarily to give access to the garden, but if there are any landscape features in the garden, as there should be, it should become a portion of their motif. If there is a pergola, summer house or garden seat the access thereto should be by the main walk and not by a lateral path. This presupposes a garden of considerable extent, as these features would have no place in a tiny one; but, lacking these, there must still be something to which the walk leads. It should not end against a wall, fence or the side of a building, but if it approach them should be continued along them to end definitely somewhere, as a door to a building or a gate in a wall, fence or hedge. This marks the real difference between the walk and the path. The latter may lead anywhere and end nowhere. It may lead into and stop at a clump of bushes and may wind and turn at convenience.

Housemaids' Caps.

Nothing makes for neatness of appearance in the housemaid's attire like a fresh, immaculate cap. With her black gown and frilly apron the little headpiece harmonizes beautifully. There is to be found in the shops a new cap that is very attractive. It is not unlike the net and lace jabots that three seasons ago were so popular. Then for morning wear or less dressy effects there is an Alsatian bow composed of lawn with buttonholed edges. This is a very practical model and launders perfectly. A tiny black ribbon rosette in the center of the bow is an addition from a modish standpoint.

CHAT ON HAND BAGS

The Monogram Model's the Winner This Season.

CORD HANDLES VERY NEW.

Irish Lace Bags All That Can Be Desired by the Dainty Woman For Wear With Lingerie Gowns—Jewelers Mount Them.

The fad of the moment in Paris is the monogram bag, and the little sketches here shown are fair representatives of a whole line of these less frivolous and most convenient of accessories.

The value of the hand bay is no longer to be disputed. The pocketless condition of the garb of modern woman has long ago let in the bag as a permanent possession.

It is counted among the legitimate expenses of economical woman and is not likely soon to drop from the list.

Black velvet bags are a feature of the season, an all the year round article, matching the garment in winter and the hat or some touch on the costume in summer. Their particular attraction at the moment is the monogram in gold or brass to match the mount.

Cords are the last expression of a sensible fashion mandate for the saving of gloves. Metal chains, however, survive and are necessary on the bag with the engraved mounting.

The suede bag is identical in outline with the velvet, and its monograms do not differ. Either material is beaded, and many of the simple designs suggest the home application of large gems and little beads.

The beaded reticule of other days has come back both in its mounted state and in a drawn together model, and invariably the beadwork, which is done by hand, is a reproduction of the old floral wreath or basket of flowers done on the most ancient of hand bags. All that is needed in the modern bead bag is that softening influence of time to bring down the colors to a lower tone.

Irish lace bags are all that can be desired for the best of lingerie gowns. Their prettiest models are those having a background of baby Irish with a heavy motif on the front.

Plain linen, too, shows an inset of Irish lace back and front, and others are of linen covered with a heavy white diagonal net resembling fish net curtaining.

silver initial is excellent when made carefully at home of rich dark homespun linen to match a costume of mulberry, for instance.

Just here let the admonition be sounded—line it with silk of a lighter shade and have the jeweler do the mounting.

Serious Fighting In Persia.

Teheran, Persia, Aug. 8.—A serious engagement took place here yesterday, in which there were many casualties. A Government proclamation, ordering the Nationalists to disarm within 48 hours, was ignored, and it was decided to adopt severe measures to enforce it. The German Minister vainly interceded with the Nationalists, who took up their position in the northern part of the city, under the leadership of Satar Khan, the Constitutionalist, and Bakir Khan.

Mr. and Mrs. West Hutchinson, of Peterborough, are visiting at the home of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Hutchinson, Cavan.

Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Vance, of Sherburne, were visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Vance, last week.

An exciting incident occurred on the farm of Mr. Sanfield Staples last week. The men were out in the fields drawing in grain when one of the men who, by the way, was a newly arrived immigrant, started to smoke, when by some means or other, the load caught fire, causing the horses to run away. The load was completely consumed and considerable damage was done to the waggon and rack. Fortunately no one was hurt excepting Mr. Staples himself, who sustained a serious injury to his feelings, which we trust will not incapacitate him very long.

Quarterly services were held in Cavanville Methodist church on Sunday evening instead of in the morning, which has been the custom for the past few years. This is a change which will meet with the approval of the church members of the three appointments. It means that each of the three churches on the circuit will have its individual quarterly services, whereas the usual custom was to hold one quarterly service in Cavanville to supply the needs of the whole circuit.

A new cement bridge is being erected on the middle road. This along with several others which have been constructed this spring and summer, shows the energetic manner in which the present council is proceeding in replacing the old-time wooden structures, which were a menace to the travelling public of to-day. Mr. Wm. Elliott, Harry Braithwaite and J. Paul are the contractors for the job.

The weather for the past few days has been such as to cause the farmers to say some mean things about the almanac man, which do not tend to improve the above gentleman's reputation. This section has been visited by some very severe electrical storms while harvesting operations are practically at a standstill.

Mr. Jim Keegan, who has been on the sick list for some time past, has recovered sufficiently to enable him to attend to business again.

Incendiary Fire.

Brockville, Aug. 8.—At 5.30 yesterday morning the fire brigade was summoned to the three-storey Merrill Block on King street, occupied by C. H. Post, dry goods, and Charles E. Johnston & Co., house furnishings, with flats accommodating the cigar factory of Robinson & Burtrand, the Young Liberal Club, Lindsay's art headquarters and lodge rooms for various fraternal organizations. A watchman found the hallway, running from the ground to the top flats, with two flights of stairs in the centre, a mass of flames, which had originated under the second stairway.

The brigade confined the fire to the hall, but in extinguishing the flames, which had become embedded in the garret, the building was completely water soaked, which caused the principal damage, estimated at between $8,000 and $10,000, partially covered by insurance.

The police have under arrest a middle-aged man giving the name of Peter Marret of Toronto, who says he started the blaze about an hour before it was discovered. He gave himself up at police headquarters, and pointed out the spot to Chief Burke, where he touched the match in a bundle of papers under the stairs. The general opinion is that it was the act of an insane man.

SIR WILFRID STARTS WORK ON ALBERTA CENTRAL R'Y

Hon. G. P. Graham Assists at Function at Red Deer, When in the Presence of a Big Gathering of Representatives of the United Farmers of Alberta New Railway is Inaugurated.

Red Deer, Alta., Aug. 11.—In the role of a railroad mechanic, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, with the assistance of Hon. G. P. Graham, drove the first spike in the Alberta Central Railway here yesterday afternoon. The company is operating under its own charter, but the general belief is that the C.P.R. is behind the project. Simultaneously with the ceremony at Red Deer, the Canadian Northern & Alberta Central locked horns before the Railway Commission in Ottawa over right of way plans.

The charter of the Alberta Central includes a line from Moose Jaw to Red Deer, and it is the intention to push the line through to the Pacific, although there is talk of a more southerly route to Vancouver.

Red Deer is the constituency which sends to Parliament Dr. M. Clark, who has made a name for himself by taking the views of the Manchester school in Parliament, even when it meant criticism of the Government. This lent special interest to the representations of the United Farmers of Alberta, which here were presented by the executive of the provincial association. Their arguments were presented in written form. They recognized that Sir Wilfrid agreed with them in having free trade as his ideal, but the memorial went on to criticize the Government for having made practically no reductions in the tariff in fourteen years. Though it seemed, stated the deputation, that Britain received preference, yet American imports had the advantage over British. Protection was useless to the farmers, it argued, because the prices of farm produce were higher in the United States than in Canada. Statements were also presented on co-operation, the Hudson Bay Railway and the chilled meats trade, on which it was made clear that the association opposed all subsidies to private corporations, and wanted a Government system of abattoirs only.

The Premier postponed his reply till the public meeting this afternoon.

On the way to Red Deer from Edmonton, Sir Wilfrid made a brief visit at Wetakiwin, Ponoka, and Lacombe. At the latter place, a motor trip was made to the experimental farm, where extensive experiments are being carried on in the values of different kinds of oats. Receptions along the line were good, and at Red Deer the welcome was participated in by a company of the 15th Light Rifles and a cadet corps.

PERISHES BEFORE CROWD

Strange Man Wades Into Niagara Above the Falls.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., Aug. 11.—In plain view of hundreds of tourists, a man, thought to be Charles E. Stolz of Buffalo, committed suicide late yesterday by going over the American Falls Prospect Park was filled with tourists when the man leisurely deposited his coat, hat and umbrella on the river bank, midway between Green Island bridge and Prospect Point. He attracted no attention by this act, as the day was warm and many others had acted similarly.

The crowd was horrified when, instead of lying down by his discarded wearing apparel, the man coolly walked to the river and waded into the swift current a distance of nearly 50 yards before the water carried him over the cataract. After entering the water, the man did not so much as glance back over his shoulder at the wildly gesticulating crowd on the bank, whose calls he must have heard above the roar of the falls.

When the swirling waters carried him from his feet, the suicide was whirled around several times. Watchers say there was no look of terror on his features, but rather a smile of delight. A woman who watched from near the point where the man entered the water, fainted as the suicide disappeared over the brink.

Melancholy over unsuccessful ventures in stocks is believed to have been the cause of the suicide. In the pocket of the man's coat was a note book, containing a memorandum of deals in stocks, as well as a certificate for 50 shares in the Lost Chance mine, made out in the name of Stolz.

Supt. Regan of the Buffalo police, notified Reservation Supt. Harris last night that the man was evidently Stolz, who left home early in the morning, and had not returned. Members of the family with whom he boarded said the description was that of the missing boarder, whom, they claim, had acted queerly for the past week. They said he had kept closely to his room and seemed downcast.

AVIATORS INJURED

Walter Brookins Falls Under Aeroplane While Landing—Not Seriously Hurt.

Asbury Park, N.J., Aug. 11.—Walter Brokins, the aviator, was seriously injured yesterday afternoon, while making a landing in his aeroplane, in a desperate effort to avoid injuring a crowd of spectators. Brookins saw that his machine was likely to strike a group of onlookers and he make a quick turn. The machine turned over and fell to the ground, striking several spectators in his descent.

Brookins was picked up stunned, badly bruised and with his nose broken, but his injuries are not fatal. Several spectators were injured.

Walter Brookins created a world's record for high flying on July 9 at Atlantic City, N.J., where he reached an elevation of 6,175 feet he received a $5,000 prize offered by the Atlantic City Aero Club. Brookins created other records for high flying at Indianapolis.

Walter Brookins shared with Count de Lesseps the honors of the Montreal meet, where he did some sensational high flying. He went to the Toronto aviation meet, but only remained for one day.

German Aviator Hurt.

Johanisthal, Germany, Aug. 11.—The aeroplanist Heim met with a serious accident at the aviation meeting here yesterday afternoon. While flying at a height of about 225 feet in a Wright machine, one of the propellors broke. The other continued to run causing the shaft to turn over several times. It fell with a crash and was completely demolished. Heim was immediately carried off the field unconscious. Later he regained consciousness, but his injuries are considered very grave.

MAYOR GAYNOR DOING WELL DOCTORS HOPE FOR THE BEST

No One is Able to Say Whether or Not Blood Poisoning May Set in, But the Mayor of New York is Resting Quietly—Policeman Prophesied Crime.

New York, Aug. 11.—Wm. J. Gaynor, mayor of New York, lies in St. Mary's Hospital in Hoboken last night with two segments of a split bullet, fired Tuesday by James J. Gallagher, who sought to assassinate him, still buried in his neck and mouth, but he has shown not an alarming symptom. It is beyond human power to say whether he will recover, for no one can say whether blood-poisoning will be the aftermath, but as yet the mayor's temperature has given no cause for alarm on this score. Every indication is that the wound is healing beautifully.

Bulletins issued yesterday and last night did not vary in their tone of optimism, and so cheerful was the patient, and so hopeful were his attendants, that Mrs. Gaynor, after an almost sleepless vigil at the bedside, left the mayor's side late yesterday afternoon for a 40-minute spin by automobile.

Quartered in a larger and better lighted room in the hospital, the mayor chats pleasantly with those who are allowed to see him, and confidently predicts that he will be out in a few days. As yet he has not discussed in any way the tragedy of Tuesday, or is he even aware of the identity of his assailant.

The mayor's highest temperature during the day was 100 3-5. As blood poisoning invariably indicates its beginning and spread by a raise in the patient's temperature, the nearly normal standard maintained yesterday was one of the most cheering signs to his physicians. His appetite is good, although his diet is necessarily limited to broths and liquid foods; he has shown great stamina of body and mind, and, so far as those who conversed with him can learn, he is not worrying greatly over the outcome.

One of the most extended conferences on the mayor's condition was held last night, but at its conclusion there was issued merely a brief bulletin, and no announcement was made as to when, if at all, an operation would be performed. In this respect it is pointed out that many persons have lived with bullets in their bodies, and as living proof of those, a man recently wounded in a manner almost identical to that in which the mayor was shot, visited the hospital yesterday evening.

The following bulletin on Mayor Gaynor's condition was issued at 9.30 last night: "The mayor's progress today has been satisfactory. He had good strength, has rested well, has taken considerable nourishment and is in good condition this evening."

"The bulletins disguise nothing," said Dr. Arlitz, commenting on the 9.30 bulletin. "We are trying to tell the whole truth."

Interest, of course, centres on the mayor's condition, but Gallagher, now professing a trace of penitence for his deed, commanded further notoriety from his cell in Jersey City yesterday evening. An anonymous letter, vulgarly couched and threatened the life of Street Cleaning Commissioner William H. Edwards, whose blows felled Gallagher to the deck of the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse on Tuesday, started a perfunctory police investigation. but generally the communication is attributed to a crank. Although it predicted for Big Bill a fate similar to the mayor's, the former football player was unconcerned.

Two young girls, who declared that they overheard an intoxicated policeman indiscreetly remark on Monday night that the mayor would be shot either on his departure for or on his return from Europe, furnished the foundation for another police inquiry. Policeman J. P. Hock of the Madison street station, whose number, 7,846, is the number given by the girls, was suspended from duty last night, pending investigation.

MAKING OF THE "QUEER"

Primitive Plant Operated in Massachusetts Prison.

Boston, Aug. 11.—How three inmates of the state prison at Charlestown were able to construct a counterfeiting outfit and manufacture spurious half dollars has been discovered by secret service officers. Ever since July 21, when the state prison officials learned that counterfeit half dollars were in circulation in the prison, and that some had got outside, an investigation has been in progress. At that time it became known that Patrick Hanley of Lynn, who is serving a 25-year sentence as a habitual criminal, was involved.

Last night it was stated that two other prisoners had been found to be accomplices of Hanley, and that the cases of all three would be presented to the federal grand jury next fall.

The method of the counterfeiters was ingenious. They secured from unknown sources some scraps of tin and lead, a jeweler's crucible and some plaster of paris. One of the trio who has a knowledge of electricity cut in on the electric light wires in Hanley's cell, attached two pieces of carbon and placed them on a small sheet of iron covered with fireproof cement. On the white hot carbon the crucible was placed, the metal was melted and the coins were manufactured in a plaster of paris mould.

It is suspected that there was an accomplice outside the jail who assisted in the distribution of the coins and the supplying of material for their manufacture.

FAREWELL TO "QUEEN'S OWN"

Toronto, Aug. 11.—With several thousand relatives and friends crowding the galleries of the Armories and overflowing out on the parade floor the officers and men of the Queen's Own Rifles took part last night in perhaps the most unique ceremony in the history of the Canadian militia. The Lieutenant-Governor, the Premier of Ontario, and the Mayor of Toronto united in bidding "God speed" to the regiment, voicing the farewell of the people of the province, and dwelling upon the precedent in Imperialism that the regiment is setting in its visit to England, a journey the importance of which will not be truly estimated until the years to come.

Six hundred men, splendid in their new uniforms and equipment, paraded, under the command of Lieut.-Col. P. L. Mason, with Major Robert Rennie and Major A. G. Peuchen second and third in command.

Among the notable on the platform were: His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor, the Premier of Ontario, Col. Sir Henry M. Pellatt, Capt. Douglas Young, A.D.C., Col. W. C. Macdonald, commanding Toronto Infantry Brigade; Major Carpenter, R.C.R.I.; Major J. O. Thorne, Quartermaster Capt. George, Capt. Cooper, Mayor Geary, and Controllers Ward, Spence and Church.

SAILORS JUMPED OVERBOARD

Halifax, Aug. 11.—Worried over the scarcity of bait and fish, the captain of a Portuguese schooner fishing off the Grand Banks, jumped overboard and drowned himself several days ago, to be followed by one of his crew three days later. Both along shore and on the Banks there is a great scarcity of bait and fish; something unusual for this time of year. An American fishing schooner that arrived at Louisburg brings news of the suicide of the Portuguese captain and one of his sailors.

MUSICIAN POUNDED TO DEATH

Buffalo, Aug. 11.—Because he stopped playing his violin in a vacant lot late Sunday night, Jacob Kziozo was so battered and kicked that his injuries yesterday resulted in his death. The police, seeking his assailants, gave out the story yesterday. Kziozo, who was a laborer in the daytime and a dance hall violinist at night, was crossing a vacant lot homeward after midnight, when held up by several men who ordered him to take out his violin and play.

Kziozo played softly at first, many popular airs, then louder, hoping to attract the attention of some passerby. Pausing a moment in the weird recital, he was brutally pounded and knocked down. Then, yanked to his feet, he was ordered to continue. He played until exhausted. Further blows were rained upon him and he was left helpless.

It was morning before he was discovered and removed. His skull was fractured.

TOBACCO CROP BADLY DAMAGED

Leamington, Aug. 11.—A storm of hail, rain, wind and electricity swept [illegible] fruit, vegetable and tobacco district of South Essex, known as the Leamington fruit belt, yesterday afternoon. The drought was beginning to look serious, but whether the rain will do as much good as the hail has done harm, is a matter to be estimated later.

The hail storm lasted for several minutes, and must have done great damage to the tobacco crop in this section, as the crop is now far advanced. The corn, vegetable and fruit crops will also be great sufferers from the storm. Hail stones weighing from one-half to one ounce were picked up on the streets of Leamington. No damage from lightning so far reported.

SUNDAY CONCERT

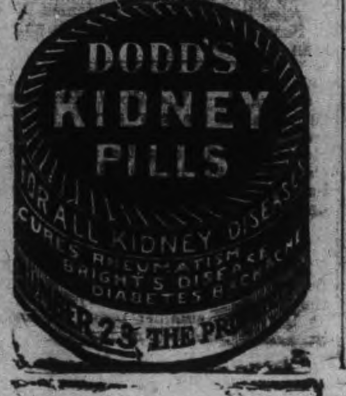
Leader Gliddon is to be congratulated on his announcement that the 57th regiment band will give a Sunday concert or two before the season closes. If music is good on Monday it should be no less acceptable on Sunday. Rag-time is not music, and rag-time should be prohibited by law. May this Sunday concert be but a forerunner of many more.

OPEN A NEW STREET

The business section, as we term that part of George street, from Brock street to Charlotte street, is without a store vacant to-day. Any place available is quickly occupied and standing offers are made in advance for premises likely to become vacant. For some reason, unexplained, business will not willingly go below Charlotte street, both good business avenues and prominent thoroughfares, locations are only taken when none other is available. Water street presents little inducement to the merchant looking for a popular stand. What is the remedy, if a remedy be desired.

The city is growing to the south and west faster than in any other direction, and the extension of the business section must be made, if ever made, with the end in view of taking in the trade coming from the south-west. For years it has been felt that the blocks, lying between George street and Aylmer street, were too long, quite as long as two average blocks. Originally laid out to avoid the creek, which was a stream much more important in the early days than now. Gradually the borders of the creek have been contracted to less than half the original width. Bearing this in mind, a sensible thing to do would be, beginning at Hunter street, to cut through to Simcoe, a new street of regulation width. The interior of the block, as [illegible]. It would not cost a large sum to acquire the right of way, and it would open up a capital opportunity to erect new business places. Only one building would stand in the way—a corner of the lock works, and eventually the factory will move, as the site increases in value and taxes multiply. On Hunter street the opening could be made just west of the Oriental Hotel, in a line with the western wall of the Snowden building on Simcoe street. Two good corners would be at once available on Hunter street and would be rented as soon as the project could be carried out. Eventually the street could be carried through to Charlotte and further on to King street. Cutting through the first block would practically duplicate the frontage, for business purposes, of George street from Hunter street to Simcoe street.

The attention of the City Council is called to the idea, though it is well known that to ensure that a suggestion will be ignored by the Council is to suggest it in the newspapers. The Board of Works might well give some consideration to the plan, which is not by any means one that cannot be carried out. So far as the city is concerned, and outside the question of benefit to the property it would be a fairly satisfactory revenue producing section, both to business and to the municipal coffers.



JOE GANS

Joe Gans is dead. He died in his mother's arms. Gans was like many another athlete, consumption took him. The athlete who trains hard is seldom a strong old man. He does not live as long as the lawyer, whose stunts are not of leg or arm work, but exercise of the brain. He burns the candle at both ends and passes quickly into a has been. He dies, is buried and is soon forgotten. Gans was a prize-fighter, but he was as gentlemanly a little coon as one would want to meet.

IT IS TIME FOR A CHANGE

The collar button has rolled beneath the bureau and we rise from our knees to remark that stand up collars and stiff shirts should be abolished. They are a nuisance. Away with them. Who has not been moved to cuss words as he scraped his nose along the floor, appearing in undignified pursuit beneath the washstand, bureau, or the bed. Out with such incentives to profanity. Abolish white shirts and stand up collars and the collar-button will die a natural death. Then think of the saving in laundry. And why shave? Why be semi-skinned and scraped twice a week. Grow whiskers and look wise, and look again to the saving, what a lively bunch of money—and whiskers one would have in 20 years. And what is the use of neckties? Their use is merely an idolatrous tribute to fashion, while they are but bulletin boards announcing what one had for dinner? And why have shoes polished, do they walk easier, and is a polished shoe less careful of your pet bunion? Men, let us rise from peering beneath the bureau, let us cut off the shackles, form a union and patronize no man who will not wear whiskers instead of a tie, and down stand up collars and polished shoes. Let prizes be given for the finest bunch of hair ornaments, and let the contemptuous proverb, "The wind blew through his whiskers," be changed to a proverb of adulation and honor, and we will be free of frills, and think of all the money saved.

A MUNICIPAL EXPERIMENT

The London Free Press says: "Port Huron Mich., is about to undertake an important experiment in municipal government. Under a new charter it will abolish the office of aldermen and the government of the city is given over to four commissioners, a mayor and three others. The mayor will receive $2,000, and the commissioners $1,200 each. The water, fire, park, police and all other boards except the board of education and public library commission, are abolished. The board of education is reduced from fourteen to four members. The office of the water board and that of the city treasurer are to be consolidated, effecting a saving in salaries. The city clerk is made the purchasing agent for the city, under the direction of the commission. The purpose of this is that everything required by the city shall be bought for cash, and advantage may be taken of discounts, which it is believed will amount to thousands of dollars every year. Statements of receipts and expenditures are to be published regularly in detail, so that citizens will know exactly where their money is going. Politics are to be wiped out entirely, so far as possible, at least. The ballots will not indicate what the candidate is, in the hope that the voter will have regard to the man rather than to his affiliation. The keynote of the system, in short, is the consolidation of the offices, the personal responsibility of every man connected with the government of the city, and the large saving in expenditures."

MATTERS AT THE CAPITAL

That it will be in the interests of the country and the Liberal party if Sir Wilfrid Laurier wields the pruning knife and lops some of the dead-wood from his cabinet tree is admitted even by those who, under ordinary circumstances, support the present administration through thick and thin. Some of the men who now sit around the council table have either outlived their usefulness or have degenerated into barnacles on the ship of state, impeding its progress. A shake up seems imminent, as it is well understood that Sir Wilfrid Laurier will not face the electors again with his craft waterlogged. Some of the young blood which was brought in has signally failed to make good. Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, he of the high sounding name, has proved that in addition to an inordinate vanity and ambition, he possesses the ability to dream like a student, and the inability to get right down to the practical administration of an important department. His bungling of the Grand Trunk strike should not add to the favor in which this government is supposed to be held by the working classes. Then there is Hon. Charles Murphy, Secretary of State, who by reason of the fact that he helped the government out of a tight hole in the matter of the Hodgins charges, was dragged from the obscurity of the practice of law in Ottawa to be a minister of the crown. Mr. Murphy has done nothing to justify that mark of the premier's esteem except to court a violent quarrel with the chief Liberal organ, the Toronto Globe. His parliamentary career, so far, has not risen above the average of that of the ordinary back bencher. George Graham, Minister of Railways, is another bright and shining light of incapacity. He was brought from a country newspaper to fill the important position he now occupies, and his chief stock in trade is "jollying" the public and parliament. It will take a great deal more than jollying to make the people of Canada believe that the Intercolonial on the present system of management, will ever be anything more than a political comedy, or that the millions being lavished on the Grand Trunk Pacific are being wisely spent. Of the old-timers, Sir Richard Cartwright and Hon. William Paterson have reached that stage of life where the arm chair and the slippers are more comfortable than a minister's chair. Sir Richard has charge of the Department of Trade and Commerce, one of the most important, in view of the increasing importance of Canada as a nation. That the aged minister cannot give to it that attention which it demands, and that the country as a whole is suffering thereby is admitted. The man who lives in dreams of the past, whose thoughts are constantly reverting to bygone political triumphs, has little grip on the present needs of trade and commerce. Hon. William Paterson, also, is in the retiring class. The Minister of Customs for several sessions past has sat idly by and watched the wheels go round. His day of hard fighting and the strenuous political life is gone. Then there is Hon. Sydney Fisher, who is dabbling away with the Agriculture Department. Mr. Fisher can do less and spend more time explaining the why and wherefore than any other minister. He is the father of much ill-conceived legislation, which has to be tinkered with and patched up in such a way that even its father himself would hardly know it.

There are signs that Sir Wilfrid Laurier will do some drastic house-cleaning ere long. The cabinet kitchen is getting littered up and the broom will have to be wielded. With his sunny smile he may tell the people of the west that he brought them prosperity, but the hardheaded west (they grow hard heads there as well as hard wheat) wants something more than platitudes. A good business-like administration of her affairs is what Canada wants, and with the present aggregation of incapables such is an impossibility. What the Dominion needs most at the present moment is men, not merely to work in her broad harvest fields, but to place her where she belongs—in the foremost rank among the British possessions. The time has come when the country is getting heartily tired of Laurierism, which means something to-day and a totally different thing to-morrow, save that under its protection the game of graft and greed goes merrily on. And what Canada wants she is going to have. Let Sir Wilfrid Laurier make no mistake about that, and cut his cloth accordingly.

HYPOCRISY

The foregoing are rates under the general tariff. There also were increases on goods imported under the British Preference. For example, the great bulk of the imports of woollen goods comes from Great Britain. The old preferential tariff on woollens averaged 23.2 per cent; the new rate 27.7 per cent; an increase of $4.50 on every $100 worth imported, or an advance of nearly 20 per cent. of the old duty. The same is the case in manufactures of flax, hemp and jute. Here also Britain supplies nearly all the goods we buy, and the duty has gone up from 17.5 per cent. to 30.8 per cent., an increase of $3.36 on every $100, or an advance of 18.4 per cent. on the old rate.

Here are the other cases:

Cotton manufactures, old preference, 20.3 per cent.; new preference, 21.9 per cent.; rate of advance, 5.2 per cent.

Drugs, dyes and chemicals, old preference, 14 per cent.; new preference, 16.6 per cent.; rate of advance, 12 per cent.

Leather manufactures, old preference, 11.7 per cent.; new preference, 12.0 per cent.; rate of advance, 2.8 per cent.

Duties of 24, 30 and 35 per cent. seem pretty steep when they are maintained by a gentleman who proclaimed himself a convinced free trader, who is simply aching to work towards free trade. This is how Sir Wilfrid Laurier has been working towards free trade:

1894. Assures the West that he is a free trader.

1896. Just before the election assures the manufacturers that he won't hurt them.

1897. Takes over the National Policy.

1903. Claps on the surtax.

1904—Brings in the "Anti-Dumping" clause to increase the protection enjoyed by manufacturers.

1907. Increases the 1907 tariff in numerous important particulars.

1896-1910. Gives $15,000,000 in bounties.

1910. Assures the West that he really is a free trader all the time and that he is working gradually towards lower duties.

It is a queer sort of gradualness. It involves the retention of the old protective tariff; the invention of new protective devices; the addition of new special duties; the spending of a million a year in bounties, and the increase of many of the duties in the ordinary tariff.

In plain language Sir Wilfrid Laurier has not advanced towards free trade. His Administration is more protectioned than that which is displaced. The assertion that the Liberal party is one of low tariffs is a piece of utter dishonesty.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

"Are you still in the church?"

"I confess regularly once a week Oh, I am a good Catholic."

"Take yourself off. I am displeased with you."

* * * * * * *

It was a drizzling, foggy morning when they drove down to the boat. But the atmospheric effects made no impression on the volatile Merrihew. And he had an eye for all things, from the baskets of fruit and flowers, messengers with late orders from the stores, repeated farewells, to the squalling babies in the steerage.

At 4 o'clock they were on the high seas, heading for the Azores. Hillard was dreaming, and Merrihew was studiously employed over a booklet on how to speak Italian in one day. Giovanni, who had been arranging the luggage, came up on deck. He had two packets of letters and telegrams. One he gave to Merrihew and the other to his master.

Hillard found among his a bulky envelope postmarked Naples. Naples!

A crumpled black silk mask.

He sat up. It had been addressed to the house and the address typewritten.

"Look at this!" he cried.

"Good Lord!" Dan gasped, his feet coming down to the deck.

Hillard was holding up for his inspection a crumpled black silk mask.

CHAPTER VIII.

WHAT MERRIHEW FOUND.

THE great ship had passed the isle of Ischia, and now the bay of Naples unfolded all its variant beauties. Both he and Merrihew were foremost in the press against the forward rail. To the latter's impressionable mind it was like a dream—yonder, the temples and baths of Nero of the golden house; thither, the palaces of the grim Tiberius; beyond, Pompeii, with Glaucus, Ione and Nydia, the blind girl. The dream picture faded, and the reality was no less fascinating—the white sails of the fishermen winging across the sapphire waters, leaving ribboned pathways behind; proud white pleasure yachts, great vessels from all ports in the world, and an occasional battleship, drab and stealthy, and the hundred pink and white villages, the jade and amethyst of the islands, the ruined temples, the grim giant ash heap of Vesuvius.

"See that village on the cliffs toward the south?" asked Hillard. "That's Sorrento, where I was born. Sh! Look at Giovanni!"

Merrihew looked at the old Roman. Tears were running down his cheeks, and his gaze strove to pierce the distance to the faroff Sabine hills. Italy! Hillard leaned over and touched him on the arm, and he started.

"Take care, Giovanni."

"Pardon! I am weak this day, but tomorrow I shall be strong. Seven years! Have you not longed for it yourself? Has not your heart gone out many times across the seas to those cliffs?" pointing to Sorrento.

"Many times, Giovanni. But remember and control yourself. Presently the carabinieri will come on board. You will see that all our luggage goes promptly to the Bristol once we are through the customs."

"Trust me, signor."

They landed at the custom house at 2 in the afternoon and passed without any difficulty.

Hillard obtained rooms pleasantly situated looking out upon the sparkling bay. Giovanni began at once to unpack the trunks, happy enough to have something to occupy him till after dark, when he determined to venture forth. The dreaded carabinieri had paid him not the slightest attention. So far he was as safe as though he were in New York.

It was yet so early in the day that the two young men sallied forth in quest of light adventure. Besides, Merrihew was very eager to find some Roman and Florence newspapers. The American Comic Opera company was somewhere north. They found stationed outside the hotel a rosy cheeked cabby who answered to the name of Tomasso, or Tomass, as the Neapolitans generally drop the finals. He carried a bright red lap robe and blanket, spoke a little English and was very proud of the accomplishment. He was rather disappointed, however, when Hillard bargained with him in his own tongue. Tomass shook his fingers under Hillard's nose, and Hillard returned the compliment. Finally Tomass compromised on 1 lira 50 centesimi (30 cents) per hour, with 50 centisimi (10 cents) as a pourboire (tip). Crack, crack! Down the hill they went, as if a thousand devils were after them.

"By George," gasped Merrihew, clutching his seat, "the fool will break our necks!"

Tomass grinned and cracked his whip. He did not understand the word slowly in his own tongue or in any other, at least not till he reached the shops. A dozen times on the Via Roma Merrihew yelled that they would lose a wheel. But Tomass knew the game.

Merrihew had never seen such shops. Coral, coral wherever the eye roamed—where did they get it all, and to whom did they sell it? Necklaces, tiaras, rings, brooches, carved and uncarved—were there women enough in the world to buy these things?

"If I had a wife"— he began.

"Well?"

"I'd feel devilish sorry for her husband at this moment."

"But isn't the color great?" said Hillard. It was good to be in Naples again.

"I never saw so many kids," Merrihew finally observed, "so many dirty ones," he added. "Herod would have had his work cut out for him here. Now where can we get some newspapers? I must know where she is."

At the bookshop in the piazza they found the Rome and Florence papers. Hillard went through them thoroughly, but nowhere did he see anything relative to the doings of the American Comic Opera company.

"Not a line, Dan."

"But there must be something in the Florence paper. They should be playing there yet."

"Nothing. These papers are two weeks old."

Merrihew stared blankly at the sheet. "I should like to know what it means."

"We will write to the consulate in Rome. If there has been any trouble he will certainly notify us. I'll write tonight. Now, here's Cook's next door. We'll ask if there is any mail for Kitty Killigrew."

But there wasn't, nor had there been, and the name was not on the forwarding books.

"Looks as if your Kitty were the needle in the haystack."

"Cut it!" savagely. Pictures and churches and museums were all well enough, but Merrihew wanted Kitty Killigrew above all the treasures of earth.

When they turned down to the Via Caracciolo, with the full sweep of the magnificent bay at their feet, Merrihew's disappointment softened somewhat. It was the fashionable hour. The band was playing near by in the Villa Nazionale. Americans were everywhere. Occasionally a stray princess or countess flashed by inert and listless against the cushions and invariably overdressed. And when men accompanied them the men (if they were husbands) lolled back, even more listless. And beggars of all sorts and descriptions besieged the "very great grand rich Americans."

They were nearly a week in Naples. They saw the galleries, the museums and churches; they saw underground Naples; they made the weary and useful ascent of Vesuvius, and Merrihew added a new smell to his collection every hour. Pompeii by moonlight, however, was worth a thosand ordinary dreams, and Merrihew, who had abundant imagination, but no art with which to express it, happily or unhappily, saw Lytton's story unfold in all its romantic splendor.

They lingered at Amalfi three days and dreamed away the hours under the white pergola. Merrihew was loath to leave, but Hillard was for going on to Sorrento, for which his heart was always longing.

A spring rain fell as they took the incline, and it followed them over the mountains and down into Sorrento. They finally drew up in the courtyard of the Hotel de la Sirena, and the long ride was at an end. The little garden was white and pink with roses and camellias, and the tubbed mandarins were heavy with fruit.

"And this is March," said Merrihew, his thought traveling back to his own bleak country, where winter is so long and summer is so short.

Their rooms were on the northeast corner, on the first floor, and from the windows they could look down upon the marina piccola and the tideless sea, a sheer 150 feet below. Everybody welcomed the Signor Hillard. The hotel was his and everything and everybody in it.

Later, when they were alone, Hillard began to explain.

"They remember my father. He used to live like a prince in Sorrento. Every time I come here I do the best I can to keep the luster to his name. Tomorrow I shall point out to you the villa in which I was born. A Russian princess owns it now."

"A real live princess!" said Merrihew. "Is she beautiful?"

"Once upon a time," returned Hillard, laughing.

Giovanni did not return till late that night, and on the morrow Hillard questioned him.

"I have been to see a cousin," said Giovanni, "who lives on the way to El Deserta."

"Ah! So you have a cousin here?"

"Yes, signor."

How old he looked, poor devil! Hillard had not taken particular notice of him during the past week's excursions. Giovanni had aged ten years since they landed.

"And was this cousin glad to see you? And is he to be trusted?"

"Both, signor. He had some news. She—the girl—is a dancer in a Paris cafe."

"Would you like me to give you the necessary money to go to Paris and bring her back to the Sabine hills?" Hillard asked softly.

"I shall go to Paris, signor—after."

"What is his name?" Hillard had never till this moment asked this question.

"I know it. That is sufficient. He is high, signor, very high, yet I shall reach him. If I told you his name"—

"There would be the possibility of my warning him."

"That is why I hesitate."

"You are a Catholic, Giovanni."

Giovanni signified that he was.

"Does not the God of all Catholics, of all Christians, in fact—does he not say that vengeance is his and that he will repay?"

"But there are so many of us, signor, so many of us small and of slight importance, that, likely enough, God, with all his larger cares, has not the time to remember us. What may happen to him in the hereafter does not concern me, for he will certainly be in the purgatory of the rich and I in the purgatory of the poor. It must be now, now!"

"Go your own way," said Hillard, dismissing him. "I shall never urge you again."

Giovanni gone, Hillard leaned against the casement. The sun was bright this morning, and the air was clear. He could see Naples distinctly. Below, the fishermen and their wives, their bare feet plowing in the wet sands, were drawing in the nets, swaying their bodies gracefully.

"Look at this!" he cried.

And then Merrihew burst in upon him wildly excited and flourished the hotel register.

"Look at this!" he cried breathlessly. He flung the book on the table and pointed with shaking finger.

Hillard came forward, and this is what he saw:

Thomas O'Mally
James Smith
Arthur Worth
La Signorina Capricciosa
Kitty Killigrew
Am. Comic Opera Co., N. Y.

"Kitty has been here!"

"Perfectly true. But I wonder"—

"Wonder about what?" asked Merrihew.

"Who La Signorina Capricciosa is. Whimsical, indeed. She must be the mysterious prima donna."

Hillard studied the easy flowing hand and ran his fingers through his hair thoughtfully.

"What is it?" asked Merrihew curiously.

"I am wondering where I have seen that handwriting before."

FLOATED LIKE AN AIMLESS CORK FOR NINE LONG HOURS

A party of five young men from Peterborough, Messrs. E. R. Kendrey, C. Wilson, H. McMillan, "Pete" Weatherstone and last, but not least, the esteemed poet laureate of the Review staff, Mr. Charles Curtis, had the unpleasant and trying experience of being lost in Sturgeon Lake the other evening for nine hours. They were on a trip of the chain of lakes with Bobcaygeon as the port when they lost their bearings in Sturgeon Lake and became as hopelessly vagrant as an ocean liner in a fog as thick as a snowbank.

However, they eventually made their destination, being enabled to do so, it is presumed, through the welcome appearance of Old Sol.

They are holidaying at Bobcaygeon.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR FAIR ARE NOW WELL UNDER WAY

The directors of the Peterborough Fair have appointed the judges for the various classes at the fair, which will be held on September 15th, 16th and 17th. Prize lists may be had at Denne's flour and feed store, George street.

In the prize list the list of judges for speeding and sheep is not accurately named. In the former capacity Messrs. Dennison, Munro and King will act, and in the latter Messrs. Brown and Milburn.

Among an attractive array of specials is one of much interest and an innovation in connection with the fair. It is a prize of twenty dollars, donated by Mr. V. Eastwood, of the local Royal Bank office, and presented through Mr. H. C. Duff, the district representative of the Department of Agriculture. The prize will be awarded for a judging competition, open to the young men of Peterborough county. The contestants must be amateurs who have never won money before in judging competitions. Sixty per cent will be allowed for placings and forty per cent for written reasons.

The directors are arranging for a bright program of vaudeville numbers, and for a spectacular fireworks display on the main night of the fair.

THE INDIANS AND INDIAN AFFAIRS OF 56 YEARS AGO IN THIS DISTRICT

People of Peterborough are always interested in the welfare of the Indian tribes, viz., the Indians of Chemong and Rice Lake, and it may, therefore, interest many to learn something of the early history of these reserves—"Canadian Pamphlets" published in the year 1854 gives some very interesting information regarding the three Indian bands of this district. It says—

The following extracts from the reports of the special commissioners to enquire into the Indian affairs of Canada having reference to the condition of the remnants of tribes still remaining in this district, will be found interesting;

SCUGOG LAKE BAND.

These Indians formerly occupied a reserve of 1,206 acres in the township of Bexley on Balsam Lake. Having become dissatisfied with the climate and quality of the soil in their locality, they were permitted to purchase out of the proceeds of their annuity, 600 acres in the township of Cartwright, on the shores of Lake Scugog.

The improvements in their former farms were to be sold for their benefit, but, though repeatedly advertised for sale, no purchasers have as yet appeared for the land. This seems to have disheartened them, and although they bought their present reserve for the purpose of improving in agricultural pursuits, they have only cultivated about thirty acres. On these they have raised wheat, oats, Indian corn, potatoes, etc., but not in sufficient quantity to supply the band with food.

They possess as public property eight log houses, and a school house, built in the same way, but the last is in very bad repair. They have neither school-master nor missionary resident among them.

The band has dwindled since 1844 from 96 to 61, and this latter number comprises only 12 children of an age to go to school.

The revenue of these three bands is $2,960 arising solely from their annuity, as the 1,268 acres which they have surrendered not yet being sold, are still unproductive.

These Indians have only about 270 acres actually in cultivation, but 314 are returned as having been cleared.

They raised last year;—
Spring wheat, 690 bushels.
Fall wheat, 208 bushels.
Indian corn, 78 bushels.
Peas, 117 bushels.
Buckwheat, 6 bushels.
Oats, 177 bushels.
Potatoes, 586 bushels.
Hay, 39 tons.

Their farming stock, owned by individuals, amounts to;—
Horned cattle, 25.
Horses, 19.
Pigs, 56.

They have also a very tolerable supply of farming implements, consisting of plows, harrows and fanning mills. They also possess lumber wagons, wood sleighs and other vehicles.

As doubts have been started respecting the Indian claim to the islands in Rice Lake, it may be well to remark that at the time of the surrender of the country from the head of the Bay of Quinte to the river Etobicoke, in 1788, Rice Lake was expressly reserved, and does not seem to have been subsequently ceded. It is true that there was much informality in the execution of this treaty that Lieutenant-Governor Simcoe declared it not to be binding except as far as the good faith of the Indians recognized it. They have carried out their share of the bargain, and we conceive that their claim to the islands in Rice Lake should consequently be admitted.

THE MISSISSAUGAS OF RICE, MUD AND SCUGOG LAKES.

These bands, members of the same tribe, surrendered the greater part of their possessions in 1818 for an annuity of $2,960 (780). The tract so ceded contains 1,951,000, acres, situated in the Newcastle District.

RICE LAKE.

The Rice Lake Indians occupy 1,550 acres of land, of which 1,120 were granted in 1834 to trustees for "the benefit of the Indian tribes in the Province, with a view to their conversion and civilization."

They have subsequently purchased 430 acres in addition out of their own funds, 200 acres in Otonabee are also held in trust for the joint benefit of the Rice and Mud Lake Indians.

These tribes are all christianized. The Rice and Scugog Indians adopting the Methodist form of belief, while the Mud Lake tribes are under the superintendence of the New England Co. Their present minister is a Baptist.

The Rice Lake Indians number 145, being a small increase within the last fifteen years. The village contains 26 houses, all but one of which are built of logs, 13 barns, of which 11 are frame structures, a frame church, a school house, a council house and schoolmaster's house.

The school is at present kept by a white woman, and the usual attendance is reported to have reached 30. During the past winter it averaged about half that number. The total number of children of an age to attend school is given at 40.

MUD LAKE BAND.

These Indians are so called from their settlement on Mud or Chemong Lake, where they have been located upwards of twenty-five years.

They occupy a tract of 1,600 acres in the township of Smith, which was given for them in trust to the New England Company in 1837. Their present clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Gilmour, has allotted to each family a parcel of ground varying from one to four acres. They number 96 individuals, holding 70 1-2 acres of land, all of which are cleared. Their public property consists of a log church, and a small quantity of farming implements and stock. They possess seventeen houses and six sheds or barns, all of which are made of logs. The produce raised last year was;

Spring wheat, 35 bushels.
Indian corn, 15 bushels.
Potatoes, 195 bushels.
Hay, 10 1-2 acres.

Their stock comprises four horses and seventeen head of cattle. The average attendance at school is said to be about 20.

"OBSERVERS" VIEWS ON GARBAGE PLAGUE

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—It appears, by a report in the press, that the Board of Health awoke Tuesday morning from its long summer sleep, and now, when the flies and maggots are about to take their long winter's sleep, after a busy summer's season, the Board, instead of doing something within its sphere, goes outside of it, and recommends what others should do. It asks the City Council to submit a garbage by-law to the people, presumably for the purpose of having it defeated as before, which is just what we do not want. We want the Council in this case, as in all others, to do its duty, for which it was elected by the people, and pass its own by-law, and assume the responsibility therefor. Whether it does so or not, it is no excuse for the Board of Health to lie idly by, while much suffering is endured and lives are lost through neglect. It is clothed with ample power under the Health Act, without any reference to the Council to protect the citizens from all nuisances, and if necessary, to call on the whole police force and all the peace officers for a proper enforcement of the Health Act. That it has not done, and evidently does not intend to do, by its shirking its duty and foisting upon the public a specious request to the Council. The report further says that the Medical Health Officer reported verbally upon the general health conditions of the city, but nothing was said about what he had done to mitigate the causes of sickness and for the abatement of nuisances.

I merely write this to show the Board that the "dear public" does not love to be humbugged.

TWO ORDINATIONS AT DOWNEYVILLE

St. Luke's church, Downeyville, was the scene of a remarkable, and at the same time impressive ceremony this morning at 10 o'clock, when His Lordship Bishop O'Connor ordained to the priesthood Revs. James Guiry and Fergus O'Brien, of Downeyville.

The ceremony took place in the presence of a large congregation, and was assisted in by a number of diocesan clergy.

The sermon on the occasion was delivered by Rev. Father Roche, president of St. Michael's College.

This is the first double ordination in the Diocese of Peterborough.

A more extended reference to the ceremonies will be made to-morrow.—Lindsay Post.

OBITUARY

MRS. JANE SMYTHE.

Word was brought to the city this morning of the death of Mrs. Jane Smythe, of Fraserville, at the age of seventy years. Her husband died about five years ago, and she has been residing with her daughter-in-law for the last few years.

No further particulars could be learned to-day, but a fuller account of the happening will appear to-morrow.

INFANT MORTALITY RATE IS HIGH

Among the children of the city and especially among those under one year of age, death has been creating great ravages and bringing sorrow to the homes of many parents. Statistics show that not for many years has the death list among those of tender years been so high.

Mary Helen, the seven months' old child of Mr. and Mrs. H. Fitzgerald, 530 Concession street, passed away last evening after a very short illness.

The little tot was of a very bright cheery disposition, and to the bereaved parents the deepest sympathy will be extended.

Death was caused by infant paralysis.

The funeral will take place to-morrow morning at ten o'clock to St. Peter's cemetery.

Flossie Craig

Flossie Craig, aged nine months and twenty-one days, died last evening.

The child was the daughter of Mr. A. Bertram Craig, 131 Sutherland avenue, and had been ill for only a very short time.

Interment will take place at Little Lake cemetery to-day.

WEATHER STRIKE SEEMS SETTLED

And the Chances Look Good for a Band Concert To-morrow Night at Victoria Park

From present indications the weather man is not going to be there with the sprinkling can to spoil the band concert to-morrow night. The rain has been the cause of the last two concerts not materializing, and, although the band showed up in full force on both occasions, the weathen conditions were so unfavorable that it was impossible to give the program.

The program that will be played to-morrow night is the same one that was decided upon for the last concert, and is as follows:

March—Collosus of Columbia.
Overture—Morning, Noon and Night
Honeysuckle Polka—Euphonium Solo by Bandsman Cronk.
Ragtime—That Fascinating Ragtime Glide.
Grand Fantasy — Reminiscences of the Plantation.
Hymn—Abide With Me (Chimes).
Comic Opera Selection—Wang.
Descriptive—Forge in the Forest.
March—Selected.

Moved by Judge E. C. S. Huycke, seconded by J. F. Clark, and endorsed by speeches of Wm. J. Crossen, car manufacturer, and Reeve Wm. J. Maher, of Cobourg; Mayor Robert A. Mulholland, of Port Hope; Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Belleville; R. S. Hudson, General Manager Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation, Toronto; Edward T. Adams, M.D., Toronto; Joseph Knox and James Mark, of Havelock; Col. H. A. Ward, K.C., Port Hope; H. T. Bush, President Standard Ideal Company, Port Hope; R. J. McLaughlin, K. C., Toronto.

"Resolved that the shareholders of the Northumberland-Durham Power Company, Limited, in general meeting assembled, desire to place on record their high appreciation of the services of John Alexander Culverwell, Managing Director and Advisory Engineer of company, in connection with its business from beginning down to the present time. We recognize that his untiring energy, ability and perseverance amidst great difficulties and in the face of apparently insurmountable obstacles have been of the highest value and service to the company and have brought the business of the company to a very satisfactory issue. When all this is remembered we feel strongly that no words can adequately express our confidence in his integrity and our indebtedness to Mr. Culverwell for his untiring zeal and unflagging energy in our behalf."

Carried unanimously by standing vote.

There were present at this meeting also a number of members of two other syndicates owning water power properties on the Trent river who were partners with the Northumberland—Durham Power Co., namely, the Culverwell-Campbellford District Power Syndicate, and the Culverwell Trenton District Syndicate, who also heartily endorsed the resolution.

In all there were some sixty gentlemen present, and there was no dissenting voice, though there was a great deal of discussion.

It was explained that although a deal had been financed with leading Montreal capitalists to the extent of two million dollars capital and a firm contract made, yet on account of the properties of these three concerns being in many cases connected with other properties of an opposing power company, it was thought the most satisfactory thing was an amalgamation, but this other opposing power company being stubborn—it was finally decided by the Culverwell interests to sell out for cash, which was done.

All shareholders made a handsome profit in the sales and cheques have been, and are still, being issued to pay off the stock. The decision of the directors in having made the sale and thus relieving the situation, was considered wise and was heartily endorsed by the shareholders.

The properties interested in this deal are simply those properties located south of Rice Lake on the Trent river, and this deal in no way has any connection with another power company, namely, the Central Ontario Power Company, Limited, which owns Burleigh Falls and Buckhorn Falls powers located north of Peterborough.

These properties will be developed at once under the managing direction of Mr. Culverwell, and already contracts have been secured from the leading manufacturers of Cobourg and Port Hope, the local directors of the company being Messrs. Wm. J. Crossen, Cobourg, car manufacturer; Col. H. A. Ward, K.C., and H. T. Bush, President Standard Ideal Co., Port Hope, and J. A. Culverwell, Port Hope, besides other Toronto directors. There are already a large number of local district people interested as shareholders.

WAS UNDRESSED AT BOTH DOME AND PEDALS

A hundred miles from home with one shoe and no hat, sounds like the humble start in life of some millionaire magnate, but it describes in this case the plight of a man from Midland who was wandering around the streets of Peterborough as the clock struck twelve last night.

He had missed the train earlier in the evening. But there was one thing he didn't miss and that was to cultivate a jag that gave him hazy visions of revolving pavements and made every two story building look like the leaning tower of Piza.

He was met by a couple of local citizens, and upon a searching verbal investigation, told his story. He said the missing slipper had been in direct conflict with the comfort of his foot, and therefore he had removed it. One of his chance acquaintances got a lantern and accompanied the man from Midland to the G.T.R. station, where the shoe and hat were located under a freight car.

The visitors were much impressed with the exhibition and spoke of it in terms of highest commendation.

THE DRAGOON COTILLION

Soldiers From Strike Duty to Mazes of the Dance

During the past few weeks the people of the various parts of Ontario have seen the troopers of the Royal Canadian Dragoons on duty for the preservation of law and order at points affected by the Grand Trunk strike. At the coming Canadian National Exhibition they will have an opportunity of seeing them in a more attractive guise when picked riders will execute in front of the grand stand the beautiful and intricate figures of "The Dragoon Cotillion." This embraces all the picturesque and complicated figures of the stateliest of old fashion dances. As the cotillon reaches its climax, the movements attain a puzzling complexity out of which horses and riders extricate themselves in a most graceful and precise manner. The spectacle in daylight as the red coated horsemen perform their evolutions with set lances and bannerettes fluttering in the breeze is beautiful in the extreme but it does not equal in any sense the exquisite picture at night when each lance point is tipped with a tiny flame. This episode is invariably greeted with riotous applause by the thousands who nightly visit the Canadian National Exhibition.

SPORTING NEWS

THE PASSING OF THE OLD MASTER

Toronto News.

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 10.—"The Old Master" has taken the final count. Joe Gans, former lightweight champion, died at 8.08 a.m. of consumption.

Gans, the most popular and most skilful negro boxer who ever appeared before the public, a favorite for close on twenty years, died as he wished to, in the arms of his mother. It was that he might be with his old "mammy" at the end, that the great lightweight made his race with death a week ago, hurrying on from Arizona.

Only a few friends had seen him since he left Arizona a week ago, in the vain and desperate hope of checking the white plague. When he came back he was little more than a skeleton, scarcely able to whisper.

Gans was conscious until two hours before his death. At his bedside at the time he breathed his last, besides his mother, were his wife and two children, "Kid" North, who had accompanied him on his trip across the country, "Uncle" Dan Pendleton, and the nurse.

In all the annals of pugilism there is no record of a more remarkable or picturesque figure than that of Joe Gans, the Baltimore fighter, who has just passed away. For nearly twenty years he was almost constantly in the prize ring, and up until his final defeat by Battling Nelson, in 1908, was justly deemed one of the most scientific aggressive and game fighters that ever donned the gloves.

Gans often declared he did not know his exact age. He reckoned that 1874 was about the year of his birth. He began fighting in an amateurish way about 1890. For the following ten years he engaged in over 125 battles, easily defeating men of minor reputation. Had he been directed aright at the time, he would have easily forged to the front and became champion years before he finally achieved that coveted distinction.

SERIES OF FAKE FIGHTS.

The trouble was, Gans became mixed up with his manager in a series of "lay-down" or fake fights, in which he might readily have gained the victory, but in which, as he always said at his manager's solicitation, he deliberately permitted himself to be beaten. In consequence, for a period, the fighting public would have none of him. Try as hard as he might to sign up a fight, there was always a sneer and a suspicion that he would throw it. About five years before his death, however, he did such excellent and palpably "square" work, that the animus against him had in a great part vanished, and his great victories were received with the entire approbation of the ring fans.

HIS GAMENESS AND SKILL.

At the age of thirty-four, at least eight years past the time when most prize fighters have received their quietus, Gans fought within the one year the two most bloody battles of his career—his two fights with Battling Nelson. For gameness and skill these fights stand without parallel. Gans, after having been knocked out by Terry McGovern eight years previously, surprised the entire fighting world by a "come back" that has often been declared impossible. After that defeat, during the year 1901 to 1908, he mowed everything down that stood before him in the pugilistic field. Frequently he weighed down to 133 pounds, although it was a terrific strain, but was always willing to try to make the weight in order to not miss the fight. At one time he was both lightweight and welterweight champion.

A GREAT COMBINATION.

He was considered by the greatest analyzers of prize fighting to be the best combination of hitter, boxer and ring general that ever essayed the game. Although a negro of humble origin, he was a model of consideration and politeness. He never sought the limelight, kept among his own race, and was the personification of cheerfulness. He began his breadwinning career in a Baltimore fish market. He saved a good part of his ring earnings and invested profitably in a Baltimore hotel, which he said frequently paid him all he needed.

CONSTITUTION UNDERMINED.

After his last battle with Battling Nelson, Gans went west and reports came east almost immediately that the beating he had received and the strain to train down had undermined his constitution. Gans denied reports, but sporting men who met him, declared him to be but a shadow of his former self.

Gans was married three times. In 1900 he wedded Miss Madge Wadkins, of Cincinnati, a member of a negro theatrical company. In 1908 the announcement of his third marriage—this time to Miss Martha Davis, of Baltimore, was made. The exact cause of Gans' death may be learnedly filed by the physicians, but Father Time and pummellings received in over 150 ring battles, do not leave much doubt as to what finally laid the once-great fighter away.

GOLF CHAMPION MAY BE HERE

It is possible that the golfers of Peterborough will have an opportunity of seeing Daniel Kenney, the open champion of Canada, on the local links.

If arrangements can be made it is to be hoped that all interested in golf will give the exhibition their patronage.

WAS REMINISCENT OF THAT TAME TILT AT RENO

Some little excitement was provided for the visitors in the city about 5.30 last evening on Charlotte street.

A young man with a good supply of spirits of two varieties got into an argument with a visitor from Midland whose avoirdupois indicated around the two hundred pound mark and who was also supplied with a little of the exhilarating fluid.

The young man took the aggressive part, but could inflict no damage on his heavier adversary, who merely pushed him aside somewhat after the Johnson style.

A telephone message brought P. C. McGinty to the scene of action and the crowd dissolved in an almost magical manner, the two principals being the first to fade away and no arrests were made.

THE SPORTS AT HOLTON'S GROVE

The sports held yesterday at Holton's Grove, near Belleville, the receipts from which were in aid of St. Michael's Academy, were a decided success. The ideal weather encouraged a large attendance and all the races were keenly contested.

The baseball game between the Grand Trunk and the Park Nine was won by the former.

A full account of the sports, together with the names of some local athletes who captured prizes, will be published in to-morrow's issue.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Hogs Active and Higher—Cattle Steady, Prices Unchanged.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Aug. 10.—(Special.)—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market the offerings this morning were 650 cattle, 600 sheep and lambs, 800 hogs and 350 calves. Owing to the smaller supply of cattle, there was a firmer undertone to the market, and prices in some cases were a trifle higher than on Monday. The weather was unfavorable, it being warm and sultry, consequently the demand from butchers was somewhat limited, and only for small lots to fill actual wants. Choice steers sold at 6c to 6¼c; good at 5½c to 5¾c; fairly good at 5c to 5¾c; fair at 4½c to 4¾c, and common at 4c to 4¼c per lb. The trade in cows was slow at prices ranging from 4c to 5½c, and bulls at 3c to 3¾c per lb.

Owing to the increased demand for sheep and lambs for export account, the tone of the market continues strong, and prices have scored a further advance of ¼c per lb. for the former and 50c each for the latter. Selected lots of sheep sold at 4c to 4¼c, and the culls at 3½c to 3¾c per lb. Sales of lambs were made at $4 to $6 each, as to size and quality.

The demand for calves was good at prices ranging from $3 to $12 each. The market for hogs was weaker, on account of the more liberal supplies, and prices ruled lower than on Monday. At the reduction the demand from packers was fair, and sales of selected lots were made at $9 to $9.50 per hundred pounds, weighed off cars, and rough, heavy stock at $8.50.

At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market the supply of live stock offered consisted of 450 cattle, 950 sheep and lambs, 875 hogs and 350 calves. A fair trade was done in all lines, and the prices realized were much the same as those quoted above, with the exception of hogs, which sold at $9.50 per hundred pounds, weighed off cars, for selected lots.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, Aug. 10.—Cattle—Steady; prime steers, $7.40 to $7.75.

Veals—Receipts 200 head; active and 25c higher; $7 to $9.75.

Wall Paper.

In these days of simplicity of furniture, when the painfully twisted shapes and dust catching whatnots are relegated to the oblivion of the attic, there is greater opportunity for the decoration of the walls of a room.

When it is brought to mind how much of the wall space of a room is evident it is necessary that due consideration be given to the selection of paper. The pattern should not be such that the harmonious furnishings of a room are lost in the dominating of color or design of the background.

Plain paper of neutral tones or indistinct striped paper is the most desirable. Nothing is more execrable in taste than the glaring huge flower forms that pain the eye and hang in questionable glory (that never seems to fade) on the four walls of a room.

A plain lower portion of burlap or Japanese grass cloth or even linen is excellent as a relief from the patterned paper above. The tapestry tones give wide choice for the lower plain band and are procurable in really artistic combinations.

One decorator suggests a study of a Persian rug for inspiration in the selection of colors for wall decoration.

FOR the SUMMER SEASON

A PAGE FOR MISSES

THE most marked feature of young girls' frocks this season is a charming simplicity that is inevitably attractive. Even though the detail of a gown may be exquisitely fine in workmanship, the effect as a whole is of a costume eminently suitable in every way for a girl not yet through her school days.

In the short dresses there is none of the exaggeration of line and over-elaboration of trimming that is noticeable in many costumes for grownups, and the young girls' fashions, whether for morning, afternoon or evenings, all show a most agreeable tendency toward the appropriate.

There is considerable clever adapting of prevailing styles to short dresses and youthful lines, and wherever extremes are popular in grownup clothes modifications of the fad so much in vogue are to be witnessed among the children's frocks. The skirt, for example, which clings in closely to the figure about the hips, but in which all the fulness is caught in to a narrow band about the feet, is suggested in the young girl's skirt in which the material is put on quite full about the hips and is kept from flaring over much by a straight band of the same or some different material put on below the knees.

Fashions for young people are, after all, but an adaptation of the costumes smart at the moment for grownups, and the successful schoolgirls' dressmaker is she who displays greatest good taste and ingenuity in this combining and readjusting.

The morning and afternoon dresses for young girls for the late spring and early summer are exceptionally pretty this year. Striped check and fancy ginghams of all kinds are much in vogue at present, and this means that special attention is being given to all morning gowns. Colored linens, both the dark blue and all light shades, are smart for dresses and coat and skirt costumes as well.

Natural colored linen and also darker shades of tan, relieved only with a touch of white at the wrists, are extremely pretty and always serviceable, while the bright, becoming pinks and blues are charming for the morning and do not soil as readily as all white.

THEN for afternoon there are the pongee, rajah and tussor fabrics that can serve so many purposes, from a gown to wear travelling to a frock to don at afternoon tea time.

For tennis and all outdoor life the check ginghams trimmed with bands of plain colored material and softened by a dainty yoke of lawn and lace are attractive year after year. If carefully laundered the color will not fade, nor, if a sufficiently good quality be bought, will the sun take the bright color from this material. A pretty model in gingham shows the favorite simple bodice, finished with a tiny rounded collar, to be worn either with a soft plaited frill and lace or lawn or with a high collar, of course transparent. The sleeves are three-quarter length, finished off with the same white frill, below which can be added or not, as desired, white cuffs of lawn and lace.

Both collar and cuffs should be attached by small clasps under the band of plain colored material, so that they can be removed and freshened without the whole gown being laundered, and also that the same frock may be worn one day with a high collar, the next with the turned down white frill. A band of the plain color forms the belt, below which the gown is quite full, the texture being caught in again lightly by a flat piece just at the knees. Below the band again the skirt is full, yet hangs straight, with no suggestion of actual flare. Large sized French dots worked upon the flat, plain bands will add extraordinarily to the finish of this model.

In the check gingham dresses extreme effects are obtained through adroit manipulation of the small squares. By turning in and over apparently plain bands of color can be arrived at, the white checks being held in place and out of sight by coarse French knots. The same effects can always be obtained in any striped goods, whether the stripes be of solid or varied sizes and shadings.

EVEN when a high standing collar is also worn a wide plaited and lace bordered frill about the throat is seen on many of the newest gowns. The dress should be finished complete without the frill, which can then be put on or not as occasion demands. An old gown can perhaps be attractively furbished up by adding about the throat and wrists a fresh white lace frill. This wide ruching is only used on a short sleeve or on one which is ended at or just below the elbow, even if there is a long cuff below this again. The frill must be tacked back against the sleeve, not allowed to fall down over the arms.

The linens and cotton taffetas this year are extremely pretty. Not only are they altogether perfect in coloring, but the models are also unusually smart, while decidedly simple. Raspberry, chantecler and deep rose are perhaps the favorite hues, but the blues are much in demand and green is more popular even than last year. A delicate pea green makes a most attractive gown for a young girl, who is more likely to be able to wear this color than an older person.

Natural colored linen will make a useful gown or suit, but mauve and lilac, the loveliest of all colors, must be saved for later years. Let the young people wear the beautiful bright shades while they can. The day is sure to come when they will no longer look their best in the glorious pinks and reds, and then the softer purples and lavenders will appeal to them far more than if they had been wearing these shades since they were small children.

THREE piece linen gowns are still much in vogue, and a pretty dress of light blue or of raspberry pink linen, with a jacket to match, should certainly be included in a girl's summer outfit. It might be well to have waist and skirt separate, so that at one time the coat and skirt can be worn with a white bodice, and again the gown throughout worn without the jacket. If there can not be more gowns in the outfit than are absolutely essential, then one three piece white street costume will make an excellent investment.

The gown, if prettily made, can serve as an afternoon frock; the skirt can occasionally be used as an extra skirt with a lingerie bodice, and the jacket can be worn at will with any white skirt or white dress. Linen, fortunately, never wears out, and for this reason it is well to have the suit of plain white butcher's linen, rather than a cream colored linen, which precludes the jacket from being worn with any other white skirt.

The Russian blouse coat and skirt costumes are extremely pretty for young girls. With cuffs, round collar and belt formed of an embroidered band of linen the coat will be sufficiently elaborate for afternoons and may even be worn over a trim lingerie frock if so wished. It is a mistake to have the jacket too short, for the longer it is the better it will serve as an extra coat.

PLAITED skirts are decidedly "in" again, and among the new models in linen dresses there is to be seen the greatest variety in the adjustment of plaits and tucks. The fewer and simpler the collection of tucks the better, though, for linen is intended distinctly as a "tub" dress, and it is a mistake to lose sight of this fact in making it up.

For travelling and for wear coming in and out of the city through the early summer a Russian blouse suit of dark blue or even deep strawberry linen is delightfully smart and, a still more important consideration, deliciously cool.

For travelling pure and simple there is nothing, however, to equal the comfort of a dark blue pongee made with a simple gown that will look trim and neat when the coat is removed and a jacket that is almost exaggeratedly plain in its lines. Many of the newest pongee, rajah and shantung costumes are lined with a foulard silk showing a ground of the same color of the pongee, and the separate waist to wear with this costume is of the same silk.

There are also to be seen extremely pretty combinations of pongee and foulard showing the entire upper part of the gown of silk trimmed with bands of pongee, while a deep pongee flounce is put on just at the knees, where the pongee coat hides the joining. The jacket in turn is lined with foulard, and there are revers and cuffs of the dotted silk.

This same effect is seen carried out in combinations of lightest weight cloth and chiffon, of chiffon and foulard, of silk and chiffon cloth, as well as some other of what might be dubbed contrasting combinations. Carried out in light, youthful colorings, this model of dress is not too old for a girl of sixteen or seventeen years.

WHEN chiffon is used in combination with other textures it is invariably [illegible] or laid in fine box plaits, and is seld[illegible] a stiff boned or even a heavy silk lining. A few hand tucks are better, however, than a multitude of machine plaits. A chiffon overdress and foulard or silk gown is not seen to any extent in the young girls' fashions, but the upper part of the gown and chiffon made on a foundation only of chiffon cloth is in evidence in all colors from white to the mourning dresses of black chiffon and silk.

As careful, if not closer, attention is bestowed upon the lining of a chiffon bodice as upon the dress itself, for transparent chiffon shows defects plainly in the under dress. There should be a border of lace at the top of the rounded neck, and in many of the linings a band of wide lace beading is placed about the corsage, with ribbon a shade lighter than the gown itself run through. India silk instead of the more perishable chiffon or mousseline de soie is often employed in lining the chiffon bodices.

A GIRL who is to remain in the city late in the season or who is sufficiently near town to make frequent shopping excursions during the early part of the summer must be provided with a really trim yet serviceable dress. For this purpose dark blue foulard made up on a lawn lining and, unless absolutely essential for the figure, not boned at all is excellent. Not for years have foulard silks enjoyed the popularity that is accorded them at present, and for a semi-elaborate gown for hot weather the material cannot be surpassed. The all silk shower proof foulard, though slightly more expensive than the cotton back quality, will more than repay in both service and duration.

Neither linens, silks, voiles nor lawns show full folds or added flounces, but flat bands of the material gathering in and holding in place the fulness of the skirt are seen on many smart models of the moment. That the lower part of the skirt may be wider than the top and yet give the effect of hanging perfectly straight, the skirt is in two parts, the lower end being put on just below the knees, under the flat, tight band.

Belts and narrow girdles are seen on all simple gowns. The belt is now perfectly round, is about three inches in width and is finished with a flat double bow knot at the back. The belt may be placed just at or a trifle above the natural waist line.

SOCIAL AMENITIES FOR THE SCHOOL GIRL

EVERY girl who has travelled at all knows the opinion of foreigners and Americans alike on the subject of the American tourist. The one idea is to avoid the places where they congregate, never to stop at a hotel much patronized by Americans, and, of all things, to shop anywhere but where the Americans go.

In travelling, of course, there is generally the aim to have as complete a change from familiar scenes, and even people, as possible, and, too, it is amusing to stay in the hotels where the people of a foreign country are living, while a chief reason for avoiding the shop popular among Americans is that the prices are invariably higher. There is perhaps an element of snobbishness in this desire to escape from one's own country people. Democrats though we are, ancient lineage still makes a ridiculous difference to us and we want to be very sure just who one is before we make friends promiscuously.

But not one or all of these very excellent excuses is sufficient reason for the American's avoidance of her own people nor of the epithet so familiar on the other side, "fools and Americans," classed pathetically together, but, fortunately, still distinct and not yet "fools of Americans." When the question is sifted down thoroughly the reason is found to lie entirely with the attitude and conduct of the American tourists themselves, and, saddest of all to relate, it is the young people of America who have done most to make their country people unpleasantly notorious abroad.

Perhaps it is because they are proud to "show off" the greater independence which is allowed to the growing generation at home, or through a mistaken idea of patriotism they wish to flap the free wings of the national bird before all the world and impress the greatness of their glorious Stars and Stripes upon every other country in civilization. Whatever the motive, it is not a laudable one. The members of an older civilization know that the height of culture is to be inconspicuous, and argue that it is only those who are not sure of themselves who try to impress their importance upon others. Real greatness speaks for itself and does not have to be constantly emphasized.

"When in Rome do as the Romans do" is an excellent motto for a young American girl to keep in mind when travelling in foreign lands. Only by conforming as closely as possible to the manners and customs of the young people of each country she visits can she hope to be inconspicuous, while the very following of certain little customs and rules of etiquette shows a gentle courtesy which is not going to pass unnoticed—nor unappreciated.

A good American citizen need not be afraid either of showing appreciation of the wonders of the Old World. She knows that in her own country are natural beauties even more marvellous than any seen by the average tourists in Europe, but for art, no matter in what branch, she must bow down gracefully before the wonderful works of hundreds of years ago. The American who insists that Niagara Falls is more impressive than Westminster Abbey is equalled only in laughable narrowness by the Englishman who "would like, rather, to see America, but on his vacations he must, of course, visit the more important countries—don't you know"—and is just starting for New Zealand.

It is difficult, indeed, at such a remark to keep the wings of the dear old eagle from flapping furiously, but restraint is the first lesson to be learned in England, and the lack of it is thought a sure mark of ill breeding.

There is no question but that it rests with the young girls of to-day to raise up their country in the estimation of the rest of the cultured world. With our great desire to see and to know, Europe is crowded all the year round with American tourists, and upon their shoulders rests the responsibility of showing what we are to the people of other lands. Unfortunately the ideal of Americanism is not very high as yet.

The American girl is admired for her beauty, and as a rule for the combined charm and simplicity of her dress, but she is not by any means held up as a model to the girls of other countries. She has made herself unpleasantly conspicuous in her manners, loud in her talk, irrationally lavish with her spending money—all unforgivable errors.

Before the American woman can really be admired abroad the American girl has much to learn. She must smooth down her nasal twang, she must lose that air of "I am from America, admire me!" She must strive not to attract attention, but to repel it; she must, in other words, seek always to be inconspicuous rather than noticeable. Through these means only can an American girl hope to stand out and be looked up to with real approval by foreigner and American alike. With these characteristics she is conspicuous as a "lady," and a lady wherever she is attracts admiration.

This is the type which the American girl tourist should and could easily represent. A girl of this sort will be at home in any country and at ease in any gathering, and in all whom she meets the standard of American girlhood and of this whole country of which she is so worthy a representative will be raised.

DOG IN A BOUQUET.

A NEW YORK girl who is a great lover of animals is the envy of all her young friends because she has recently become the possessor of a wonderful little dog which is one of the tiniest in the world. This pet is full grown, but so diminutive that his mistress can hold him in the palm of her hand, where he would look for all the world like a toy if it were not that his sensitive little body is usually all a-quiver.

He comes from Mexico and is of the Chihuahua family, which even on its native heath is rare and costly. His attractions are many, for not only is he beautiful, with most eloquent eyes, but his disposition is gentle and affectionate and he responds to kindness from any one.

Little Hua, owned by the New York girl, was sent to her in a most picturesque way while she was visiting in Southern Mexico with her father, for he came hidden in the centre of a bouquet of flowers presented to her by their host, who is an old friend of her father's. Transplanted to our cold climate, the little creature has to be protected most carefully and will not be allowed out of the house until very warm weather sets in.

BLAIRTON MINE TO BE WORKED

Re-opened after Thirty Years of Idleness--Ore of Good Quality Found.

Special to the Review.

Havelock, Aug. 10, 1910.—The contract for drilling at Blairton iron mines, has been completed by Smith & Travers, of Sudbury, for the Hamilton Steel & Iron Co., who have an option on the property. A report will be submitted in the near future and, if found satisfactory, work will be commenced at the mines at once. It is quite likely that the report will show that the mine can be operated at a profit, as the rock is said to contain a large percentage of iron ore. The diamond drill, under the management of Mr. Ginnis, has been at work at the mine for the past four months, and a complete examination of the mine has been made.

The Blairton iron mines are situated about six miles east of Havelock and 2 1-2 miles north of Blairton station. They cover about 25 acres and were operated about 30 years ago, but have been idle since.

SUMMER HOLIDAYS AT ROUND LAKE

An Ideal Camping Spot, and One Easily Reached

At Round Lake, five miles directly north of Havelock, an excellent holiday can be spent under canvas, with good fishing, beautiful scenery and excellent bathing combined.

This lake, which empties its waters into North river, receives its name from its peculiar shape, being as nearly round as it is possible for a natural body of water to be.

From the centre of the lake the shores appear to the eye like one complete circle, so much so that it is difficult to pick out any particular part of the shore from the centre of the lake.

The lake has some deep spots for bathing, where the sandy beaches stretch out for a distance of one hundred yards in some places. To the northeastern part of the lake there are several islands, which, besides making it a picturesque spot as they jut up in the lake with their load of foliage, is the place where many of the prize black bass seem to congregate.

Excellent places can be had for pitching a tent on its high and dry shores, and supplies may be secured from the surrounding farmers. The fishing in this lake has brought forth many a fine bass and some great 'lunge, and is keeping well up to its record this year. Special amusement is found in fishing for cat fish, which are very plentiful in this lake, and which rival brook trout in flavor. They may be taken in large numbers at sun-down, with what the fishermen call a "bob."

North River, which connects Round and Belmont Lakes, is a beautiful stream. It is narrow, with shade trees ranging on either side, so that the water is cool, even in the middle of summer. With its beautiful foliage on either side, and its many coves adorned with water lilies, it is a beautiful stream for pleasure boating, and the portion above Burnt Dams has been called "Lovers' Creek." At Burnt Dams, where the river plunges downward for twenty feet over a rocky ledge, is situated the Havelock electric power house, which supplies Havelock with its electric lights.

Round Lake has had many visitors during the season, and they still continue to come.

Mr. Peter Haig is spending a month under canvas at McCutcheon's Landing.

Mr. J. V. A. Coon and family are camping at their cottage at the south of the lake.

Mr. Jno. Richards and family have returned from camping at Seeney's Landing.

Mr. K. McKay and family are camping at McCutcheon's Landing.

Mr. H. T. Andrews has purchased a cottage west of the one occupied by Mr. Coon.

Mr. Wm. Backus and family; Mr. Milton Neil and Mr. Geo. Chiles, are also enjoying a holiday at the lake.

SUMMER DOINGS AT VIAMEDE

Masquerade Ball, a Great Success—Viamede Annual Regatta

Last week a large towing party was arranged by Mr. W. E. Williams, of Rochester. The party numbering over 70, were towed in 25 small boats by the steam launch Evelyn, which towed the party through the Burleigh Falls locks to Lovesick, where an enjoyable time was spent. Dinner was prepared by the guide, which everyone did full justice to. Oranges, candy, &c., was distributed during the afternoon, and those who were disciples of Isaac Walton had full opportunity in Lovesick Lake to get their full share of the fish. The party returned to Viamede in time for supper, and on landing gave three hearty cheers for Mr. Williams, "For he's a jolly good fellow."

On Friday evening a grand masquerade ball was held in the Viamede pavilion, which was largely attended. One feature was the orchestra, who were all in costume and added very much to the evening's enjoyment.

The "Viamede" regatta was voted by all a grand success.

YOUTH AND BEAUTY

Women and Men are Anxious to Keep Young

Nothing so detracts from the attractiveness of woman as dull faded, lusterless hair.

There is no excuse for this condition nowadays, because notice is hereby given to the readers of the Review, that Parisian Sage, the quick acting hair restorer, is now on sale in Peterborough, at the drug store of Wm. Madill, and sold with a guarantee at 50 cents a large bottle.

Since its introduction into Canada, Parisian Sage has had an immense sale, and here are the reasons:

It is safe and harmless.

It removes dandruff in two weeks, by killing the dandruff germ.

It stops falling hair.

It promptly stops itching of the scalp.

It makes the hair soft, glossy, and luxuriant.

It gives life and beauty to the hair.

It is not sticky or greasy.

It is the daintiest perfumed hair tonic made.

It is the best, the most pleasant and invigorating hair dressing made.

Fight shy of the druggist who offers you a subtitute, he is unworthy of your confidence.

Made only in Canada by Giroux Mfg. Co., Fort Erie, Ont. The girl with the Auburn hair is on every bottle.

STREET PAVING IN LINDSAY

The Lindsay Post says—The unfavorable weather prevailing during the past week has retarded the work on the William street pavement. A portion of the block between Lindsay and Kent streets would have been paved had not the rain interfered with the work.

The mixer has arrived and was brought into requisition to-day on the southern end of the contract. The four and a half inch concrete base will be started at once, after which the blocks will be placed in position.

Last night's heavy downpour of rain destroyed over a dozen bags of cement, which were piled along William street. The Ontario Asphalt Block Co. has a staff of about fifty men on the work.

The Quaker Oats Co. wish to engage a number of girls. The work is agreeable and not laborious. Apply promptly at the mill office.

IF YOU WANT TO FIGHT IT OUT

From the age of 45 years the eyes have undergone a natural change (which no eye escapes), so that they are either out of focus for distance or near vision, especially at night. You cannot see distinctly with the paper a foot from the eyes and you need strong light. Your real need is suitable glasses. If you want to fight this difficulty out with nature you may do so, millions have done it before you and have been worsted in the fight. We are relieving the eyes of such cases every day. Perhaps you will be wise by taking the matter in time.

PRIZE LIST FOR THE OTTAWA FAIR

The prize lists for the Central Canada Exhibition, which will be held from September 9 to 17, have been issued and copies may be procured from Secretary E. McMahon, Ottawa. An examination of the many columns of premiums offered convinces one that the coming Fair will be one of superior merit. Additions have been made to the cash awards, and wherever a new class was needed to meet the wishes of exhibitors it was inserted. Several $50 prizes are alotted in the horse department, and in some cases there is a fifth prize. Considerable increases have been made in the prizes for French-Canadian horses. The cattle department is dealt with in the same liberal manner. The fame of Ottawa's poultry show is well recognized in the premium list for the coming event. Prize winners are informed also that gold medals may be exchanged for $20 in cash in all cases where exhibitors prefer the money. Entries close on September 7.

There is a total of some $17,000 to be distributed among prize winners, and stock owners owe it to themselves to secure a copy of the premium list and select the departments in which they can compete. Apart from the cash won there is a distinct advantage in presenting stock and produce to the public at so great a show as the Ottawa Exhibition.

Lingerie and tailored waists of white seem about equal in favor.

Chains are superseding leather straps for handbag handels.

HOOSIER POET ILL

America's Best Beloved Poet, James Whitcomb Riley, is in a Critical Condition.

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 12.—James Whitcomb Riley, the "Hoosier poet," is seriously ill at his home in this city. He was able to sit up only a few minutes yesterday. Mr. Riley, who is said to be suffering a mild form of paralysis, has not been able to leave his home for several weeks, but his condition has not been regarded crucial until recently.

James Whitcomb Riley, one of the most human and lovable of American poets, was born at Greenfield, Indiana, in 1852. He was for some time engaged in journalism. His first attempts in literature were published under the pseudonyn of "Benj. F. Johnson of Boone." Among his works are: "The Old Swimmin' Hole," "Afterwhiles," "Character Sketches," "Old Fashioned Roses," "Pipes o' Pan," "Green Fields and Running Brooks," and "Pomes Here at Home."

JEALOUSLY CAUSED TRAGEDY

St. John, N.B., Aug. 12.—Andrew Rossi, an Italian, will probably be sent up to-day for trial on a charge of murdering Diego Siracuso, in the city of St. John on July 23rd last. Jealousy was the cause of the tragedy.

Siracuso, the murdered man, was the proprietor of a little grocery store, and Rossi was his clerk. Among the customers of the store was Minnie Jones, a pretty young woman who had been married in Boston to a young Brunswicker named Grigoire, but later left him and returning home took the name of Jones. Both Italians were attentive to her and she accepted gifts from them.

CAPTAIN SCOTT'S SHIP OVERDUE

London, Aug. 12.—Considerable anxiety is felt for Capt. Scott's Antarctic expedition ship, the Terra Nova, now eleven days overdue at Cape Town. The vessel has not been spoken since she left Madeira on June 27.

Capt. Robert F. Scott, commander of the British expedition, which set out on June 1 from London for the South Pole, is not yet aboard the Terra Nova, but left July 16 to join the vessel in New Zealand. Lieut. E. R. Evans is second in command, and the other officers and scientists number 28. The crew consists of 27 picked men.

VOTING ON TWO NEW INDUSTRIES

Owen Sound, Aug. 12.—A number of capitalists, represented by J. A. Minchner of Stratford, will build and equip a large furniture factory here. The town is granting a loan of $20,000 to the concern, and the bylaw sanctioning it will be voted on by the ratepayers on Aug. 27.

Another bylaw will be voted on by the ratepayers on Aug. 29, sanctioning a bonus of $50,000 to a million-dollar shipbuilding plant promoted by British capitalists, and, in addition, taking stock in the industry to the extent of $50,000.

MAMMOTH COAL-HANDLING PLANT

Fort William, Aug. 12.—A contract for a mammoth coal-handling plant for the Fort William Coal Dock Co. of this city, has been let, and construction will be commenced at once. The company will become the coal-handling department at the head of the lakes, of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

The first unit of the plant, which will be completed in less than two months, will cost about $170,000. The unloading capacity will be 4,000 tons in ten hours.

RED FLAGS WERE IN EVIDENCE

Halifax, Aug. 12.—Hundreds of red flags floated in the breeze in the mining town of Springville yesterday, where the striking U.M.W. miners were celebrating 52 weeks of idleness. The idle workmen formed a procession, and marched through the principal streets in the business section to the picnic grounds a mile from the town, where a great demonstration was held.

Confessed to Breaking Her Skull.

New York, Aug. 12.—Because his conscience troubled him, Bernard McMahon surrendered to the police and confessed to breaking a woman's skull with a hammer. He is a carpenter, and on Aug. 1 crept up behind his landlady, Mrs. Bessie Taylor of Third avenue, struck her down with a hammer and robbed her of $11.

ADVISED AGAINST RUPTURE

French Premier Advises Alfonso Against Breaking With Rome.

Paris, Aug. 12.—A despatch to The Temps from Madrid quotes Marquis de Ojeda, the recently recalled Spanish ambassador to the Vatican, as endorsing the policy of Premier Canalejas, but at the same time denying that dissensions existed in the Vatican, and expressing the belief that a solution of the trouble will be possible through a display of good-will on both sides.

The Temps, under reserve, also reproduces from The Madrid Epoca a statement attributed to Premier Briand of the French Government, who is at Ramouillet. The Premier is said to have strongly advised King Alfonso against breaking with Rome, and is quoted as saying: "We slid down hill farther than we intended. But for the clumsiness of the Vatican, the papal nuncio would be still in Paris, and the ambassador of France at Rome."

Madrid, Aug. 12.—Premier Canalejas, following an interview with Marquis Emilio de Ojeda, the ambassador to the Vatican, who was recently recalled, yesterday announced that the Spanish diplomat probably would not return to Rome.

REGAINS SIGHT BY FAITH

Reading, Pa., Aug. 11—After an anointing service conducted in the Followers of Christ Church, Sunday night by Bishop H. M. Lengel, Mrs. William E. Ringler, who has been blind for several years, declares that she is regaining her sight. It is the third time that a healing of anointing service has been held over Mrs. Ringler.

A cataract formed over the woman's eyes and she was unable to see anything. She is a regular attendant at the church, and holds the belief that the healing ceremonies carried out according to the fifth chapter of James help her. She says it is not the service that heals, but the patient's faith. Mrs. Ringler had not fully regained her sight, but declares she is able to see nearby objects.

STAND FOR FREEDOM

London, Aug. 12.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Antwerp International Free Trade Congress has resolved to send the following message to the leaders of the Canadian free trade movement: "The International Free Trade Congress, representing twenty-six countries, desire to convey to Canadian free traders their congratulations on the stand which they are making for freedom, and, in the name of all the countries represented here, to thank them for the example of a high unselfish ideal, which they are setting to humanity. Louis Strauss, president."

SHIP LINERS WANT ARBITRATION BOARD

Montreal, Aug. 12.—Ship liners are making an application to Mackenzie King for a board of conciliation under the Lemieux Act. The men want more wages than the shipping companies are willing to pay. It seems that cattle shipments have fallen off considerably and consequently the number of men employed has been under the normal. It is expected the Minister of Labor will grant the request.

READY TO BRING EARL GREY BACK

Ottawa, Aug. 12.—Alex. Johnstone, Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has been advised by wireless telegraph, that the Government steamer Earl Grey, which will meet His Excellency Earl Grey at the mouth of the Hayes River, and bring him and his party back to civilization, has arrived at Port Burwell. There the Government steamer Stanley, which went north early in July, under command of Capt. Sam Bartlett, was met. Capt. Bartlett and the pilot took charge of the Earl Grey and proceeded on the way to the Hayes River.

SHOWS SOME IMPROVEMENT

Montreal, Aug. 12.—The fact that the strike on the Grand Trunk has been brought to a conclusion and that strike conditions have ended was shown by the statement of earnings exhibited by the company, when a decrease of traffic earnings of $105,967 was shown, while during the week previous, when the strike was in full progress, a decrease of over $400,000 was registered.

Aylesworth will in all probability take a holiday on the continent. Mr. Aylesworth will return to The Hague on Oct. 5, when judgment will be delivered in the case.

BOAT IS HIT BY FERRY TWELVE THROWN INTO BAY

John Pearce is Drowned in Accident to the Sailboat Director, When the Mayflower Runs Smaller Craft Down in Dark.

Toronto, Aug. 12.—One more death and perhaps three were likely added to the awful toll of drownings in Toronto Bay for 1910, last night, when the island ferry boat Mayflower crashed into the 17-foot sailing skiff "Director," of the National Yacht Club fleet.

The sail boat carried a party of 11 people, and all were dumped and had to be rescued in various ways by people, who were near the scene.

The missing man is John Pearce, 116 Crawford street.

Those reported safe are: Alex. Jaffray, Mrs. Alex. Jaffray, Norman Jaffray, Miss Olive Jaffray, Miss Margaret Jaffray, Arthur Jaffray, Miss Esther MacMahon, Miss Viola Fleury, Robert Jennings, Robert Rumney and Ruddy Rumney.

The collision took place about fifty feet from the end of the Centre Island dock. Norman Jaffray was handling the Director's tiller, and was steering an easterly course from the direction of Hanlan's Point across the path of the Ferry, which was heading for Centre Island and was just crossing into the slip.

Jaffray apparently believed he could glide safely past. There was a pretty fair breeze blowing, but close to the island it was freaky and came in puffs.

They were struck about midship and everybody in the party was precipitated into the water.

Olive Jaffray and young Jennings alone clung to the overturned craft and it was their shouts that attracted rescuers from various small boats and the shore. Thomas Patterson and J. Seabrook of the I.C.Y.C. rendered effective service in a rowboat.

Six of the party were brought to the mainland by the Mayflower on her return trip. Others were brought by the ferry tug Jasmine, and were delivered to their homes in a carriage.

The police had difficulty in getting anything like an accurate tally of those accounted for. It was for a long time feared that five were missing. Then it dwindled down to three.

Doubts were entertained about Miss Margaret Jaffray, Miss Viola Fleury and John Pearce. Later reports purported to have come from the Jaffray home, 17 Pacific avenue, stated that Miss Margaret Jaffray and Miss Fleury had been taken into a cottage on the island and decided to stay there for the night.

So that the only person unaccounted for is John Pearce, of 116 Crawford street. Still, Robert Jennings' brother, in conversation with a reporter at 2 a.m., declared that his brother had just 'phoned him from the Jaffray residence, and they had not heard from Miss Margaret or Miss Fleury.

The accident happened at 9.30. Mait Aykroyd was summoned and dragged until midnight. Weeds were very thick on the bottom and the dragging was difficult.

The sailboat is said to have carried the proper quota of lights, and it is said that Capt. McMaw of the ferry made an effort to direct his course sufficiently to miss a collision.

Young Jaffray was a very able sailor and although the Director was owned by Rudd Romney, it was Jaffray who usually sailed her.

LARGE RACE TRACK WILL IN ALL PROBABILITY BE BUILT IN PETERBOROUGH

There is every likelihood of Peterborough being incorporated on the Canadian racing circuit with Toronto, Fort Erie, Hamilton, Windsor and Ottawa, when the track at the capital is completed.

This is no idle speculation, but a project under serious consideration by Toronto horsemen, the Review learned last evening upon the best of authority.

Peterborough is looked upon favorably by the promoters of the scheme for two reasons. In the first place it is convenient to Toronto, and in the second place it is a good midway point between Toronto and Ottawa. And another thing that is to be taken seriously into consideation is the fact that the present track at the Driving Park is one of the fastest in Canada.

The amended Miller bill, which permits of race meets in Canada of only a week's duration, has made the horsemen realize that if they are to have a reasonably profitable racing season that it will be necessary to establish more tracks, hence the idea of including Peterborough in the circuit.

WOULDN'T TAKE PRISONER FURTHER

Brockville, Aug. 12.—Five prisoners, sentenced to terms in the Central Prison, were brought in from Ottawa Wednesday night by the provincial bailiff and left at the county jail until noon yesterday, when the trip was resumed. The discovery was made here that one of the quintette was of unsound mind, and the bailiff refused to take him further. The prisoner was taken back to Ottawa by the chief turnkey of the Ottawa jail, who was returning after leaving a convict at the Kingston Penitentiary.

Pittsburg, Aug. 12.—Alleging that he had wronged her, Catherine Botti, 13, slipped up behind Pasquale Bolpe, 18, and struck him on the head with an axe here yesterday. He was almost decapitated, and died shortly afterwards. The girl was arrested.

Paris Green Killed Him.

Charlottetown, Aug. 12.—Frank Kelly, a farmer, about 35 years old, living at Lincoln, took violently ill while spraying potatoes with paris green. It is supposed that he must have accidentally swallowed some of the poison. He died shortly after.

Big Salmon Pack.

Seattle, Aug. 12.—The sockeye salmon pack on Puget Sound this year to date aggregates approximately 190,000 cases. Reports received from Vancouver Wednesday were to the effect that Fraser River packers expect to have 200,000 cases of fish.

Montreal, Aug. 12.—In regard to the report that the Canadian Pacific had absorbed the Allen Line, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific, said last evening: "The Canadian Pacific is always working some new plans for their steamship service. There is, however, nothing special going on just now."

CHURCH STRUCK BY LIGHTNING

Montreal, Aug. 12.—During the severe electrical storm yesterday, St. Andrew's Church, Beaver Hall Hill, was struck by lightning. Firemen crawled up the inside of the steeple and extinguished the blaze before much damage was done. Lightning also struck a trolley wire and burned the fuse out of a car at the corner of Green avenue and St. Catharine streets. A hole was burned through the car. The motorman's hands were severely scorched.

BIG DREDGING CONTRACTS LET

Ottawa, Aug. 12.—A number of contracts have just been awarded by the Department of Public Works. Dredging in Miramichi Bay, N.B., W. J. Poupoure, Montreal, and A. & R. Loggie, each get a contract for $100,000 approximately. L. Cohen & Son, Montreal, will dredge at Montmagny, the total being about $8,000, while N. Trudel will build a breakwater at Matane costing $5,500.

MAY NEED A COMMISSION

Laurier Promises to Look Into Cold Storage Requirements.

Red Deer, Alta., Aug. 12.—A generous thunderstorm, accompanied by a high wind, marred the beginning of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's meeting here yesterday afternoon. The interruption occurred before Sir Wilfrid spoke, and an adjournment was made to the Lyric Theatre.

The Premier, after preliminary remarks, turned his attention to the tariff. He reproved the grain growers for an invidious distinction, in the memorial presented yesterday, between the farmer as a class and the manufacturer as a class.

"If there is a distinction, such should not exist," he declared. "The farmers are working for the country and the manufacturers are working for the country, and it is to the interest of both farmer and manufacturer that they should work for a common purpose. I think it should be done for the advantage of both."

Sir Wilfrid again declared his faith in the leaders of British free trade, and declared that Fox, Cobden, Bright and Gladstone were the great men of English history. Canada was a young country, however, and the same methods could not be applied here.

Discussing the chilled meat industry, Sir Wilfrid admitted that the present method entailed hardship and sometimes loss. Australia and New Zealand were the largest exporters of dressed meat, and what those countries could do Canada could do. If cold storage facilities were required, similar to what had been provided for the butter and cheese industry of Ontario and Quebec, that could be done also for the new trade of the west. Sir Wilfrid concluded by stating that he had written Hon. Sydney Fisher, to look into the matter and appoint a commission, if necessary.

CAT ADOPTS CHICKEN

Ottawa, August 11. — A few days ago a Mrs. Karon, a Swedish lady, living here, drowned a batch of kittens. The mother cat acted very disconsolately.

About the same time one of the family found in the yard a recently hatched chicken and brought it into the house. The kittenless cat immediately jumped onto the sofa where the chicken was and started licking and carressing it as though it had been a kitten. She curled herself around it and cuddled it up in the fondest way imaginable. The cat's mothering of the chicken lasted for twenty-four hours, till the chicken died, whereupon the cat showed every evidence of grief.

A few hours later the cat went out of the house, and strange to say, from somewhere brought back in her mouth a kitten several days old, which she started to mother.

AVIATORS FLEW THROUGH STORM

Mezieres, France, Aug. 12.—With an average speed of more than sixty miles an hour, Aviator Le [illegible] yesterday flew from Nancy to Mezieres, leading the field of cross-country flyers for the third day's run in the six-day program, in which $17,000 in prizes are to be awarded.

The direct distance between Nancy and Mezieres is 100 miles, but Le Blanc raced with a storm most of the way and was driven far out of his course. In the two hours and five minutes that he was aloft Le Blanc estimates that he traveled at least 130 miles. The storm forced Lindpainter, one of the contestants, to alight. Le Blanc and Aubrun, however, drove their machines ahead of the storm, escaping the centre of it, but getting badly "mixed up" in the edges.

A crowd of 50,000 greeted Le Blanc on his arrival here and the enthusiasm was the greatest that has yet marked the race. Le Blanc was carried to his hotel on the shoulders of frenzied admirers.

WILL TAKE DR. CRIPPEN BACK

Quebec, Aug. 12.—That Dr. Crippen and Ethel Leneve will leave Quebec by the first steamer sailing after Aug. 15, was the first definite official announcement yet made. It was announced to The Gazette representative yesterday by Governor Morin of the provincial prison.

A scene of human interest took place yesterday morning in the grim office of the governor. The kind-hearted matron, Mrs. Phillips, bustled in to see him at 9 o'clock. "Miss Leneve has made a request to me, sir. She feels the loss of her hair sorely, and she wants all the rest of her money spent on some tresses which will hide the nakedness of her hair."

ARE GOOD SONS OF GT. BRITAIN

Pretoria, Aug. 12.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Premier Botha said his Government still awaited the Unionist program. He heard people were being stirred up to "vote British," but had not the Empire every reason to regard him and his party as her sons and as good as any other?

Mr. Smuts advocated training on the Swiss basis with a nucleus for a striking force.

GAYNOR STRONGER

Mayor Continues to Show Improvement—Bullet is Lodged in the Arch of the Pharynx.

New York, Aug. 12.—The following bulletin on Mayor Gaynor's condition was issued at 10.30 last night by his physicians:

"Mayor Gaynor has had a comfortable day and he has taken sufficient nourishment. He is cheerful, stronger and is now resting quietly. The complete radiographic examination by Dr. C. D. Caldwell shows definitely that the bullet is lodged in the vault of the pharynx, easily accessible, but it is not considered wise to attempt to remove it at present. The blood examination is also satisfactory."

Judging from official bulletins, Mayor Gaynor spent a satisfactory day, and as yet his physicians say no sign of blood poisoning has developed. On the other hand, rumors were afloat yesterday that his condition was worse and that his surgeons were in the midst of a disagreement. Robert Adamson, his secretary, and E. J. Lederle, health commissioner of New York, gave out a statement discrediting the reports of friction among the medical advisers. The statement does not deny the report specifically, but by implication.

OPTIMISTIC CROP REPORTS

Toronto, Aug. 12.—The latest western crop reports received by the Canadian Northern Railway yesterday, confirm the optimistic feeling that has lately been gathering strength.

It is shown that grain cutting is becoming general, while in some places it began a week ago. Recent hail storms appear to have done little damage.

In some localities the outlook is poor, but these are comparatively isolated instances. For example: Vonda, on the C.N.R. main line, reports that the average yield of wheat is only about one-third. Marshall states that some fields will reach 25 bushels to the acre, and oats 50 bushels.

OVER FALLS IN BARREL

Niagara Falls, Ont., Aug. 12.—Bob Leach yesterday signed a contract with a Toronto man, named Ellmore, to go over Niagara Falls in a steel barrel some time before the end of September. Each party to the contract deposited $100 with George Holliday, Thorold, as evidence of good faith.

Leach has twice gone through the whirlpool rapids in the barrel. He expects to take the same route as that traveled by Anna Edson Taylor in her memorable trip over the cataract in 1901. Ellmore has returned to Toronto [illegible] take moving pictures of Leach's proposed trip.

BRANTFORD HOTELS HAVE RAISED RATES

Brantford, Aug. 12.—Brantford license holders, together with the license and police authorities, held a conference here yesterday, when the trade promised to be good and keep hotel. The presence of undesirable persons around hotels was discussed, and the hotelkeepers promised to immediately notify the police on such occasions. With only nine hotels left in Brantford, the rates have been raised to $1.50 per day and up.

Stabbed and May Die.

Brantford, Aug. 12.—Two serious rows were reported here yesterday among local foreigners. Steve Kovalka and Jolin Howarth were victims, the former being kicked by a man named Fedoz. Howarth was stabbed by Steve Kovatch, who is under arrest. Both men are in a serious condition, and it is thought Kovalka will die. The latter's assailant fled to Buffalo.

BROOKINS IS RECOVERING

Asbury Park, N.J., Aug. 12.—Walter Brookins, the aviator, who braved death Wednesday at the aviation meet here in an effort to avoid hitting the crowded grand stand, will soon be able to fly again, as he is recovering from the injuries he sustained in the crush. Ten spectators were hurt when Brookins up-tilted his machine and dropped 50 feet, are also doing well.

Stole the Safe.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Aug. 12.—An army paymaster's safe containing $6,500 was stolen from the manoeuvre camp at Pole Mountain and carried away. There is no trace of the robbers. Officers are searching the hills. When W. T. Wilder arrived the first of the week with the money for the troops, the safe contained $20,000.

ONE HEAVEN

They are preparing private altars in the ship to convey the papal legate and other dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church to the Eucharistic Congress in Montreal. However, up to date there is supposed to be but one heaven.

GREAT WORK

The Board of Health will recommend that a garbage by-law be submitted to the people by the Council, to be voted on by the people at the next municipal election. Now, who dares to say that our Board of Health is not a live one. The maggots and flies think they are just lovely and the stink still stinketh in the still night air.

DOG DAYS

Sinius the dog star is now the morning star in the eastern sky. These are the dog days, and many Peterborough citizens declare they are also the dog nights as well. It would be hard to find a place the size of Peterborough where there were more long tailed, short pedigreed, leather lunged dogs than here.

GOD SAVE THE KING

England has just completed a 26,000 ton battle ship. God Save the King and bless the poor. It is called the Lion and will throw a 1250 pound projectile. God Save the King and bless the poor. She cost millions and a bottle of champagne was broken over her when she was named. The Germans are now designing a battle ship with a displacement of 27,000 tons. Hoch der Kaiser. But England is there with several other battle ship keels of the super-dreadnaught class already laid. God Save the King and bless the poor. What odds if there are thousands starving.

THE HAWK

Like a meteor a hawk dropped from above as we walked along the banks of the Otonabee. A note of terror, and, when the hawk rose there was a field sparrow in its talons. Worry feasts on man even as the hawk did on that little bird. We are happy, our home life is complete, when in comes trouble and we become a prey to worry, grow old and gray, wrinkled and decrepit. Disappointments feasts. We fall. Then, instead of becoming philosophers we are the victims, and makes every one around us miserable. There is ever the winner and the one who must lose, the feaster and the feasted upon but with every day there is another chance, and we cannot always lose.

AN ORIGINAL "CUSS"

Thomas Smith, the Caughnawaga Indian, who destroyed himself, was at once an original fellow. In love, and the victim of the "frosty mitt" and "stoney eye," he did not jump in the river to come out fish bitten and bloated; or did he shoot himself to make a most unlovely corpse, neither did he hang himself, nor disfigure his features with carbolic acid. He loaded his pockets with dynamite and exploded it. There was considerable effort necessary to locate the remains and secure enough for the inquest and funeral. An eye in a tree and the rest anywhere within 1,000 feet gave the undertaker a run for his money. Poor fool, why didn't the Indian get another girl.

ANOTHER MODERN MIRACLE

Now that the operation of transplanting eyes has been successful as was practiced in Peterborough a few days ago medical skill has again achieved a great triumph, and the name of Dr. L. Webster Fox will be remembered as the original operator who performed it. The grafting of bones, and transfusion of blood from one human being to another, no longer creates wonder. Flying machines, the wireless and all the rest are taken as a matter of course. We refuse to be amazed. But that tiny seed, the leaf of the tree, the flower, the apple ripening there hold their secret closely. The source of life what is it? This is the question that has puzzled the philosophers of the ages and this is the question that will puzzle them until men cease being men and become Gods. What makes the ivy crawl up the side of the house? Aye, there's the rub.

BOTH DECEIVED

No word was necessary, no voice or written thought. They were mutually much impressed. Woman is a queer creature. She does not learn it all by the book, and there is much that language never reveals to her, that she very easily discerns. His wife knew. She sensed the situation, for in women intuition tells many a story, erects many a barrier, and saves many a tragedy of hearts. He denied. The new acquaintance, he declared, was like all other women, save his wife, who was his only jewel. But infatuation will find a way and they often met. He was sure that had he only married her, his life would have been brighter far. She too declared fervently that until her eyes met his, she had never known love. But they are both deceived. The flame will burn itself out. They will see each other less often, think of each other less, and finally feel that they can get along very well apart indeed.

AN INCIDENT

Three years ago on the 27th of next month had you been on one of the main roads leading to Welland you might have noticed a form lying in the middle of the road. A man passed in the deepening twi-light wrapped in thoughts concerning his business. He didn't see the form. His horse did and shied, and looking out from his rig he saw a fellow lying there. Without making inquiries as to his condition he drove on. The twi-light fell to a deeper dusk. Night came, the stars peeped out. It was dark. Then in the dark a traction engine came along and the man in the middle of the road was crushed to death, three children were left fatherless, and a widow left to nurse them. An action for damages was dismissed. The man was drunk? And who is our neighbor? Is he next door? Yes he is next door. Is he across the street? Yes he is across the street, and in the next block, the next town, the next province. He is the man, woman and child we shall meet to-day, no matter whom they may be. Is he angry and do we meet him in a distant place, then he is our neighbor. Is it the man who works beside us, smiles in our face, and thrusts us in the back. He is yet our neighbor, and we leave him to the unerring judgment of time. They may not know as much, live in as fine a house as some of us, they may not have as much money, but they are our neighbors warmed by the same sun, chilled by the same wind, inspired by the same hopes, downcast by the same sorrows as the rest of us.

Yes friend, they are our neighbors, even if they lie drunk in the road.

TRIBUTES FOR CRIPPEN

No doubt Dr. Crippen will find consolation in the flowers sent him by the ladies of Quebec. Poor man he is in need of some such evidences of sympathy under the trying conditions in which he is placed. The fragrance of the bouquets will relieve the unpleasant atmosphere of his prison cell and, who knows, perhaps, carry him back to the days when in his youthful innocence he roamed his native dales.

And how touching is it to reflect on the tender thoughtfulness of these women of Quebec, eager to comfort this afflicted man in his loneliness and peril. A crime of less magnitude than that attributed to him would not have reached their deep emotional natures. The prisons of that old city and province are still full of men under suspicion of guilt, but none of these achieved the distinction which entitles him to a share in the generous sentiments of these fair alleviators of distress. It is only great deeds that claim their gentle regard. A vulgar murder in a brawl or sordid theft makes no appeal to the, the law may claim its toll without moving their pity. But the act of a Crippen with all its contributory incidents and the stirring events succeeding it is a different matter.

Here was a man who out of infatuation for a pretty face killed the partner that for years had shared his joys and sorrows, and to whom he was bound by all the ties which humanity regards as sweet and sacred, who mutilated the body out of which he had crushed the life and with callous deliberation buried them in corrosive lime and walled them up in the hope of securing his personal safety. The time and care requisite to such a deed demanded nerves of steel and a heart of stone and the apathy manifested subsequent to the tragedy places Dr. Crippen among those whose criminal history has immortalized as without a soul. He decked his new leman in the jewellery of his murdered wife and introduced her to all the joys of gay society. His flight and delightfully romantic chase by the officers of the law are of a piece with his crime and the last scene of the drama so full of lights and shades promises to be in keeping with all such performances.

How could a man who did all this and risked all Dr. Crippen did to win a woman fail to appeal to the romance-reading woman of any city. It is singular that the ladies of Quebec are satisfied with sending him flowers. He might be deluged with letters, with offers of marriage, with all unqualified testimonies of devotion and affection. A man who can, in cold blood, slay and mutilate and bury one woman to win the love of another, who can risk death on the gallows to obtain her caresses, may not be regarded approvingly by the law, but he will never lack female admirers. There never was a gallant like Bluebeard. Had Launcelot been a rake he might have rivalled him, but Launcelot had a conscience, that was his limitation and his undoing.—Vancouver Province.

LET'S TRY AGAIN

Yes, friend, the summer is stealing by, and how about those New Year's resolutions? Half of them broken, eh! Well, it's the same old story with all of us. We can't win in a day, a month, a year. It is the work of a lifetime. Life is a campaign, a succession of battles, and we all have our victories to win. It means a struggle, and New Year's resolutions are good enough, but daily resolutions are better. It's a fight from the first breath of morning till evening falls and sleep comes. Life is a campaign and we must either go forward or be passed back. We cannot sleep in the trenches, neither can we trust the traitors within. Look out, beware of the devil. We have seen him in the bar room and we have seen him with a Bible in his hand going to church. Yes, we have broken our resolutions. We have said to ourselves, "from now out I'll do the square thing," and here we are as crooked as ever. We said we would be kind at home, and not scold the children, and the first thing we are as crabid as ever. We said we would put in the plug, stay on the rock, and quit drinking. Well! well! at it again. And you with that chew in your mouth, or that cigar sticking out from your vest pocket, try again and keep on trying. In that awful Japan-Russia war the Japs did not take Port Arthur in a day, but met with repulse on repulse. But over the dead bodies they passed and won. But the greatest battle is in a man's own heart, the unseen spot where Old Nick gets busy. Yes, and there is many a heart that's torn by the Arch Fiend, and many the sorrows of defeat that hide in a smile. You are down, get up, move on to victory. You have your Port Arthur to capture and it's a mighty tough fight. If you had an enemy that you could shoot or punch or kick in the shins there would have been a dead Devil years ago. You can't hire a detective to spot him. You cannot get a policeman to arrest him. You have to call on a Higher Power. You have seen the sign "Beware of the Dog." They should hang on every street corner, on every church steeple, on every store window, the words, "Beware of the Devil," and I will wager that sometimes he would have a hand in mixing the paint. The devil spends years in getting well acquainted. He is a sprinter of note; and never tires. Refuse to look at him, and he togs up, looks like a friend, and wants to shake hands. That fellow won't take an insult. It's a case of fight at close quarters all the time, isn't it? You want to succeed. We know you do. You admire strong men, don't you! You want to be as they are, strong physically and mentally. Now, don't think for a moment that the devil leaves these chaps alone. The stronger the man the stronger the temptation, for Old Nick doesn't waste much time on milk and water people. Yes, they have their awful battles, but theirs may be battles in secret. How about those broken resolutions! Let us resolve again. Believe in the Infinite. His hand in the snow drops no less than in the gentle wind which comes through the window at this moment. Believe in the closed door and the open heart, the bended knee and the going out again to face the world a better man. You have your Port Arthur to take. Get in league with the Infinite and take it.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

Another fortnight found the pair back in Naples after spending a week on Capri. At the hotel they found a batch of mail. There was a letter which held particular interest to Merribew. It was from the consul at Rome, a reply to Hillard's inquiries regarding the American Comic Opera company.

"We'll now find out where your charming Kitty is," Hillard said, breaking the seal.

But they didn't. On the contrary, the writer hadn't the slightest idea where the play actors were or had gone. They had opened a two weeks' engagement at the Teatro Quirino. There had been a good house on the opening night. The remainder of the week did not show the sale of a hundred tickets. The American manager had shown neither foresight nor common sense, and his backer withdrew his support. The percentage demanded by the managers in Florence, Genoa, Milan and Venice was so exorbitant (although they had agreed to a moderate term in the beginning) that it would have been nothing short of foolhardiness to try to fill the bookings. The singing of the prima donna, however, had created a highly favorable impression among the critics, but she was unknown. The writer also advised Mr. Hillard not to put his money in any like adventure.

"That's hard luck," growled Merrihew, who saw his hopes go down the horizon.

"But it makes me out a pretty good prophet," was Hillard's rejoinder. "The angel's money gave out. Too many obstacles. To conquer a people and a government by light opera—it can't be done here. And so the American Comic Opera company at the present moment is vegetating in some little boarding house waiting for money from home."

Merrihew gnawed the end of his cane. All his pleasant dreams had burst like soap bubbles. Had they not always done so? There would be no jaunts with Kitty, no pleasant little excursions, no little suppers after the performance. And what's a Michelangelo or a Titian when a man's in love?

"Brace up, Dan. Who knows? Kitty may be on the high seas—that is, if she has taken my advice and got a return ticket. I'll give you a dinner at the Bertolini tonight, and you may have the magnum of any vintage you like. We'll have Tomass drive us down the Via Caracciolo. It will take some of the disappointment out of your system."

They had ridden up and down the Via Caracciolo twice when they espied a huge automobile, ultramarine blue. It passed with a cloud of dust and a rumble which was thunderous. Hillard half rose from his seat.

"Somebody you know?" asked Merrihew.

"The man at the wheel looked a bit like Sandford."

"Sandford? By George, that would be jolly!"

"Perhaps they will come this way again. Tomass, follow that motor."

Sure enough, when the car reached the Largo Vittoria it wheeled and came rumbling back. This time Hillard had no doubts. He stood up and waved his arms. The automobile barked and groaned and came to a stand.

"Hello, Sandford!"

"Jack Hillard, as I live, and Dan Merrihew! Nell," turning to one of the three pretty women in the tonneau, "what did I tell you? I felt it in my bones that we would run across some one we knew."

"Or over them," his wife laughed.

When we meet an old friend in a foreign land, one who has accepted our dinners and with whom we have often dined, what is left but to fall on his neck and weep? There was, then, over this meeting much ado with handshaking and compliments, handshaking and questions, and, as in all cases like this, every one talked at once—how was old New York, how was the winter in Cairo, and so forth and so on—till a policeman politely told them that this was not a private thoroughfare and that they were blocking the way. So they parted, the two young men having promised to dine with the Sandford party that evening.

"What luck, Dan!" Hillard was exuberant.

"Saves you the price of a dinner."

"I wasn't thinking of that. But I shall find out all about her tonight."

"Who?"

"The lady in the fog, the masquerading lady!"

CHAPTER IX.

[illegible]

SANFORD knew how to order a dinner, and so by the time that Merrihew had emptied his second glass of Burgundy and his first of champagne he was in the haze of golden confidence. He would find Kitty, and when he found her he would find her heart as well.

"Say, Jack," said Sandford, "what did you mean by that fool cable anyhow?"

Hillard had been patiently waiting for an opening of this sort. "And what did you mean by hoaxing me?"

"Hoaxing you?"

"That's the word. I was in your house that night. I was there as surely as I am here tonight."

"Nell, am I crazy or is it Jack?"

"Sometimes," said Mrs. Sanford, "when you put the chauffeur in the tonneau I'm inclined to think that it is you."

Hillard looked straight into the placid gray eyes of his hostess. Very slowly one of the white lids drooped. His heart bounded.

"But really," continued Sandford seriously, "unless you bribed the caretaker you could not possibly have entered the house. You have been dreaming."

"Very, well, then. It begins to look as if I had." It was apparent to Hillard that Sandford was not in his wife's confidence in all things. He also saw the wisdom of dropping the subject while at the table.

They took coffee and liqueur in the glass inclosed balcony. Hillard found a quiet nook not far from the lift. He saw that Mrs. Sandford's chair was placed so that she could get a good view of the superb night. He sat down himself, sipped his liqueur meditatively, drank his coffee and as she nodded lighted a cigarette.

"Well?" she said, smiling into his brown eyes. She was rather fond of Hillard, a gentleman always and one of excellent taste. There was never any wearisome innuendo in his wit nor suggestion in his stories.

"You deliberately winked at me," he began.

"I deliberately did."

"Sandford is in the dark. I suspected as much."

"Regarding the wink?"

"Regarding the mysterious woman who occupied your house by your express authority and who rode the hunter in the park."

"Was there ever a more beautiful picture?" sweeping her hands toward the city.

"The beauty of it will last several hours yet. Who and what was she?"

"I wish I could find you a wife. You would make a good husband."

"Thank you. I am even willing, with your assistance, to prove it. Who was she, and how came she in your house?"

"She wished that favor and that her presence in New York should not be known. Now describe to me exactly what happened. I am worrying about the plate and the silver."

He laughed. "And, you will meet me halfway?"

"I promise to tell you all I dare."

"There is a mystery?"

"Yes. So begin with your side of it."

He was a capital story teller. He recounted the adventure in all its color—the voice under his window, the personals in the paper, the interchange of letters, the extraordinary dinner, the mask in the envelope. She followed him with breathless interest.

"Charming, charming!" She clapped her hands. "And how well you tell it! You have told it just as it happened."

"Just as it happened!" confounded for a moment.

"Exactly. I have had a letter—two, in fact. You did not see her face?"

"Only the chin and mouth. But if I ever meet her again I shall know her by her teeth."

"Heavens! And how?"

"Two lower ones are gone. Otherwise they would be beautiful."

"Poor man! You have builded your house upon the sands. Her teeth are perfect. She has fooled you."

"But I saw with these two eyes!"

"There is a preparation which theatrical people use—a kind of gum. She mentioned the trick. Isn't she clever?"

"Yet I shall know her hair," doggedly.

She put her hands swiftly to her head. "Now, you have known me for years. What is the color of my hair?"

He recounted the adventure in all its color.

"Why, it is blond."

"Nothing of the kind. It is auburn. If you cannot tell mine, how will you tell hers?"

"I shall probably run after every red headed woman in Europe till I find her," humorously.

"Our ears never deceive half so often as our eyes."

"Her face is not scarred, is it?"

"Scarred!" indignantly. "She is as beautiful as a Raphael, as lovely as a Bouguereau. If I were a man I should gladly journey round the world for the sight of her."

"I am willing, even anxious."

"[illegible] fall in love with her."

"I believe I have."

"Come, Mr. Hillard. I am just fooling. You are too sensible a man to fall in love with a shadow—a mask. One does not fall in love that way."

"She is married?"

"Certainly I have not said so."

He flicked the ash from his cigarette.

"Have you those letters?"

"One of them I'll show you."

"Why not the other?"

"It would be wasting time. It merely relates to your adventure. She sailed the day after you dined with her."

"That accounts for the shutters. The police and the caretaker were bribed."

"I suspect they were."

"If I were a vain man, and you know I am not, I might ask you if she spoke well of me in this letter. Understand I am not inquiring."

"But you put the question as adroitly as a woman. We are sure of vanity always. Yes, she spoke of you. She found you to be an agreeable gentleman. But," with gentle malice, "she did not say that she wished she had met you years ago under more favorable circumstances."

"Come, give me the death stroke and have done with it. Tell me what you dare, and I'll be content with it."

She opened her handkerchief purse and delved among the various articles therein.

"I expected that you would be asking questions, so I am prepared. I did not tell my husband for that very reason. He would have insisted upon knowing everything. Here, read this. It is only a glimpse."

He searched eagerly for the signature.

"Don't bother," she said. "The name is only a nickname we gave her at school."

GIVING BONUSES AND FREE SITES

(Industrial Commissioner Says to Review)

IS NOT A SOUND POLICY

Woodstock, Ont., July 29.—At an enthusiastic meeting of the business men of this city, held in the city hall to-night, it was decided to offer special inducements to the Edwin Holden Textile Co., of Philadelphia, who, for the past few months have been looking for some suitable Canadian city in which to start a branch. The concern is one of the largest of its kind in the United States.

The city will be asked to furnish a free site and to guarantee the bonds of the company up to $10,000.

Woodstock has secured three industries within a few days. The last to decide to locate there was the one mentioned in the dispatch above.

"How is it that Woodstock is getting so many manufactories in so short a time and Peterborough is not getting any?" was asked of Industrial Commissioner Duggan by the Review yesterday afternoon.

In answer to the question Mr. Duggan explained that the reason Woodstock was landing the industries was because they made it so inviting for them to come there, and in a way that Mr. Duggan said he did not approve of—by bonusing them and giving them free sites.

"Peterborough, or any other town, for that matter, can't afford to do that," said Mr. Duggan. "It's a bad policy. The idea should be to make a town sufficiently attractive economically to make it a paying proposition for an industry to locate in that town. The other plan is fundamentally unsound, and is very often the avenue to disaster."

Mr. Duggan, in answer to another query, said that the policy being pursued in Peterborough—that of endeavoring to get manufacturing concerns to locate here with the advantages offered by Peterborough to manufacturers as the arguments—was the one that had been found successful and was being pursued to advantage in the large American industrial centres.

"There are many problems, both of a civic and economical nature, which have to be approached and solved before Peterborough can hope to achieve any great success as a manufacturing centre. When a big industry contemplates locating in a town the question of the advisability of the location is approached in a businesslike manner and the comparative prices of power, coal, water, gas, tax rates, accessibility to raw material, transportation facilities to and from markets, and labor conditions are carefully weighed. These essentials to manufacture, as supplied by different towns, are thoroughly dealt with, and from the examination of them the site of the plant is determined.

"Peterborough has much to commend her, but should endeavor to perfect herself in those features in which she is now deficient."

Mr. Duggan stated to the reporter that he did not think he would be well advised in enumerating these deficiencies for merely disinterested or casual public consumption, but was sure that those interested in the city's welfare would learn the strong and weak features of Peterborough's advantages and disadvantages in a careful and comprehensive examination of the accessibility of Peterborough's facilities and utilities from the standpoint of the manufacturer keenly on the alert for the most desirable location.

SAILING RACES THE FEATURE OF YACHT CLUB'S REGATTA; A GALA DAY AT CHEMONG

Dame Fortune was in a happy mood yesterday, and as a result the annual regatta of the Chemong Yacht Club was even more successful than usual. The weather conditions were ideal. In the early part of the afternoon there was a stiff north wind blowing, but instead of hindering the running off of the races it was a help, as it enabled the various sailing races to be finished in quick order, thus doing away with the "all-afternoon" affairs that have marked several previous regattas.

The crowd was one of the largest that has ever assembled at Chemong Park. The 'busses running from the city were crowded at every trip, and by two o'clock not a rig was to be had at any of the local livery stables. Stony Lake, Sturgeon Point and most of the other Kawartha summering places, were also represented, and there were besides, many visitors from more distant points, such as Toronto, Hamilton, Kingston, etc.

The scene at the club boat-house was a brilliant one. The steep banks at this point formed a natural ampitheatre, and as the finishing buoy was anchored just in front, the boathouse, was the mecca for the greater part of the crowd. The surface of the water was dotted with pleasure craft of all sizes and shapes, and these, as they darted swiftly around the larger but slower excursion steamers, and zig-zagged up and down the course, presented an ever changing panorama of shifting color.

There were several upsets during the afternoon, but as there were always plenty of people near at hand no serious results were forthcoming.

Twenty events were on the programme, and all except one were run off promptly, and at the scheduled time. The exception was the ladies' single canoe race, which had to be called off, either because there were not enough single ladies, or because there were few who wanted to test their individual skill with the paddle.

The big race of the afternoon—the open dinghy race—was won by Llwelyn Hall's 'Jambarie.' This race has been the feature event of the regatta for some years, and the winner, besides receiving a silk flag with the emblem "Chemong, '10" emblazoned thereon, holds the Kawartha Lakes' challenge cup until called upon to defend it the following season. There were ten boats entered in this event, and all got off to a good start. A. A. Hollingshead, last year's winner, sailed very well for the first leg of the course, but after that he gradually dropped to the rear, and the race developed into a duel between the winner and the Hopkins brothers, of Sturgeon Point. It was a pretty race throughout, the boats always being near enough to make things interesting. Hall's time for the six miles was one hour and ten minutes. The Lindsay representatives were second, a hundred feet back, and then came Hopwood, the park entry.

Hall did not do as well in the open sailing race. He got off to a bad start, and after the first mile, never had a chance, the Hopkins brothers rounding the buoy on the last leg of the three miles with a good lead. The start of this race was an exceedingly pretty one. In contrast to the other race, the boats got off in a long single line, the bow of one almost touching the stern of the next ahead, giving the boats an appearance of a gigantic white-toothed saw, supported with the cutting edge upwards.

Acton and Smith, both of Stoney Lake, had a great struggle in the men's open skiff race. Both oarsmen were tied until within ten feet of the judge's boat, when the latter did some erratic steering, Acton gaining a lead that won him the race.

In the ladies' tandem canoe event Misses Marion and Phyllis Denne had things all their own way, duplicating their performance in several previous regattas by easily outdistanceing the other entries.

Messrs. Ray and Bruce Wilson had no trouble in winning the gasoline launch race for boats of over three horsepower. G. E Oxley, of Stony Lake, with a handicap of three minutes, was second in this event.

In the evening the day's programme was brought to a fitting close by a dance in the pavilion. Music was provided by the 57th Regiment Band, and the floor was thronged with dancers, both the park and annex residents turning out en masse to do honor to the occasion.

The officers in charge of the races were;—

A FINE DAY, A BIG CROWD, A SUCCESSFUL REGATTA

Nothing can be introduced at any summer resort that is superior for attracting large and enthusiastic crowds than at a regatta, and the fourth annual regatta of the East End Cottagers and Campers' Association of Stony Lake, proved to be no exception to the rule.

It was conducted as usual at Crowe's Landing and the results were all that could be wished for and the managing committee are to be congratulated on the complete success attendant upon the affair. The threatening morning blossomed out into an ideal day and no prettier sight could have been witnessed than the swarms of boats, both large and small and all containing interested spectators of the proceedings.

Excursions from Norwood, Lakefield and Peterborough all aided to swell the number of sight-seers.

The sailing races were keenly contested and provoked great excitement.

IN THE EVENING.

The presentation of prizes took place in the evening in the pavilion, when a concert, followed by a delightful dance, was held. There was a splendid attendance, many of those from the lower end of the lake remaining for the evening's festivities. The pavilion was crowded and the event was a great success.

Mr. Jas. Thompson, M.P.P., for East Peterborough, occupied the chair and in an address congratulated the committee upon the excellent success of the regatta, with which he had been greatly impressed. He thought the thanks of the cottagers should be extended to the committee in charge, who had worked energetically for the success of the event, and to whose untiring efforts a good deal of the credit was due. There was no doubt that the people had thoroughly enjoyed the afternoon's sport and the contestants were to be congratulated upon their showing.

The programme rendered was most enjoyable. Every number was enthusiastically received, and the audience demanded encores in most cases. The programme was as follows:

Instrumental duet — Misses Norma Mitchell and Estelle Partridge, of Toronto.

Vocal solo—Mr. Jackson.

Vocal solo—Miss Duffield, Norwood.

Chorus—"The Night-Owl Camp."

Vocal solo—Miss Molly Young, Peterborough.

Address—Mr. J. A. Sexsmith, M. P., for East Peterborough.

Violin solo—Mr. Jackson.

Instrumental solo—Miss Dagenais, Montreal.

The prizes were then presented by Mr. Thompson to the various winners. Mr. Jack Roxborough, winner of the canoe sailing race for the fourth time in succession, was given a most enthusiastic reception, being greeted with three cheers by the large crowd.

Miss Norma Mitchell, of Toronto, assisted greatly in the success of the evening by her sympathetic accompaniments.

The regatta committee consisted of Messrs. J. A. Rogers, C. E. Pakenham, H. E. Lord, J. R. McKelvie, and B. T. Simpson.

The Judges were Messrs. R. Simpson, U. W. Waters and W. L. Craig, while Mr. Lees was clerk of the course.

The Quaker Oats Co. wish to engage a number of girls. The work is agreeable and not laborious. Apply promptly at the mill office.

SPORTING NEWS

LONDON IS EXCLUSIVE

Jack Johnson Won't be Allowed to Fight in England

Seattle, Aug. 11.—Jack Johnson has had things coming his way for a long time; in fact, ever since he won the world's championship in his antipodean battle, but now comes some news that is a distinct shock to the eminent colored exponent of the art of fisticuffs. The governors of the National Sporting Club of London, one of the foremost organizations of the kind in the world, have put up the bars, drawn a colored line of their own, and Johnson will not be permitted to appear there.

After Governor Gillett rooted the fight game out of California, the sporting authorities saw the early death of boxing in the United States. However, it was expected to flourish even better than before in England, and the National Sporting Club looked like the logical place for the next fight for the heavyweight bout. But it appears that the club governors do not care to court the notoriety that would attend the battle, and that, following the tip given in the agitation against the moving pictures, they will not let Johnson engage in an encounter under the club auspices.

Already there is some talk of another club being formed and an arena built on the outskirts of London, but this talk will probably die out. At present Johnson need not worry. He says that he has a vaudeville engagement abroad that will give him $3,500 a week. Johnson has been on the stage long enough to be able to throw that press agent stuff pretty strong, so his figure should be boiled down about 75 per cent. Anyhow, he can make more money now behind the footlights than in the squared circle, and the prospects for a heavyweight battle of note are fainting away.

THE FIGHT WAS DECLARED OFF

Philadelphia, Aug. 11.—A disagreement over the division of the receipts resulted at noon to-day in the calling off of the six-round bout between Sam Langford and Al Kaufman, which was scheduled for to-night, on the grounds of the Philadelphia National League Baseball Club. The fight was originally set for last night, but rain caused a postponement. Langford, who refused to fight, forfeits $250, which will be divided between Kaufman and Harry E. Edwards, of this city, the promoter of the bout.

After the bout was postponed last evening, Joe Woodman, Langford's manager, notified Edwards that Langford would not fight Kaufman to-night, but was willing to sign again for a bout next Wednesday night. The reason given was that Langford would not be in the best condition after a layoff of 24 hours, and that his reputation was too valuable to risk that way.

A hasty conference was held, and when Billy Delaney, Kaufman's trainer, ridiculed the excuse given, Woodman stated that the negro would agree to go on to-night if guaranteed $7,500. The men had agreed to fight for a percentage. Edwards asked time to consider the matter, and to-day announced that he would not agree to the proposition, and called the bout off.

An effort was made to have another heavyweight meet Kaufman, but Edwards would not listen to it.

Edwards was incensed at the turn in affairs. He said:—"There is only one thing to it; Langford has deliberately crawled out of the match. Whether from fear or because he has listened to offers for another match, I don't know, but I am determined that he shall not pull off any trick on the Philadelphia public, therefore I called off the match entirely, and shall return full money to those who bought tickets."

Incendiary Fire.

Brockville, Aug. 8.—At 5.30 yesterday morning the fire brigade was summoned to the three-storey Merrill Block on King street, occupied by C. H. Post, dry goods, and Charles E. Johnston & Co., house furnishings, with flats accommodating the cigar factory of Robinson & Burtrand, the Young Liberal Club, Lindsay's art headquarters and lodge rooms for various fraternal organizations. A watchman found the hallway, running from the ground to the top flats, with two flights of stairs in the centre, a mass of flames, which had originated under the second stairway.

The brigade confined the fire to the hall, but in extinguishing the flames, which had become embedded in the garret, the building was completely water soaked, which caused the principal damage, estimated at between $8,000 and $10,000, partially covered by insurance.

The police have under arrest a middle-aged man giving the name of Peter Marret of Toronto, who says he started the blaze about an hour before it was discovered. He gave himself up at police headquarters, and pointed out the spot to Chief Burke, where he touched the match in a bundle of papers under the stairs. The general opinion is that it was the act of an insane man.

PASSING OF THE CRADLE

Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Good-bye to the cradle, the dear wooden cradle,
The rude hand of progress has thrust it aside;
No more to its motion, o'er sleep's fairy ocean,
Our play-weary wayfarers peacefully glide.

No more by the rhythm of slow-moving rocker
Their sweet, dreamy fancies are fostered and fed;
No more to low singing the cradle goes swinging;
The child of this era is put into bed.

Good-bye to the cradle, the dear wooden cradle!
It lent to the twilight a strange, subtle charm;
When bees left the clover, when play-time was over,
How safe seemed its shelter from dangerous harm!

How soft seemed the pillow, how distant the ceiling,
How weird were the voices that whispered around!
What dreams would come flocking, as rocking and rocking,
We floated away into slumber profound!

Good-bye to the cradle, the old wooden cradle;
The babe of to-day does not know it by sight.
When day leaves the border, with system and order,
The child goes to bed and we put out the light.

I bow to Progression, and ask no concession,
Though strewn by her pathway with wrecks of the past;
So off with the lumber, that sweet ark of slumber,
The old wooden cradle is ruthlessly cast.

THE FEATURE OF THE BILL

"Danny" Simmons Apparently has an Act That Spells Hit With a Capital "h"

The following from the St. John, N.B., Sun is an appreciation that speaks for itself:

The large audience that filled the Lyric last evening was more than satisfied with the program.

The act of the clever comedian, Danny Simons, proved to be one of the most laughable attractions seen in St. John for many a day, for "Danny" kept everybody in a continuous roar of laughter from the time he stepped on the stage till the conclusion of his act. His impersonation of "Teddy" Roosevelt in the jungle made a tremendous hit and the applause that followed it was hearty. His dancing was also a treat. "Danny" is a very clever comedian and crowded houses are assured during the balance of the week.

Don't Poison Baby.

FORTY YEARS AGO almost every mother thought her child must have PAREGORIC or laudanum to make it sleep. These drugs will produce sleep, and A FEW DROPS TOO MANY will produce the SLEEP FROM WHICH THERE IS NO WAKING. Many are the children who have been killed or whose health has been ruined for life by paregoric, laudanum and morphine, each of which is a narcotic product of opium. Druggists are prohibited from selling either of the narcotics named to children at all, or to anybody without labelling them "poison." The definition of "narcotic" is: "A medicine which relieves pain and produces sleep, but which in poisonous doses produces stupor, coma, convulsions and death." The taste and smell of medicines containing opium are disguised, and sold under the names of "Drops," "Cordials," "Soothing Syrups," etc. You should not permit any medicine to be given to your children without you or your physician know of what it is composed. CASTORIA DOES NOT CONTAIN NARCOTICS, if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

MUSIC AND ITS CHARMS

Lenox, Aug. 11:—Treed for six hours by a big cow moose, which was finally enticed away by a graphophone, was the experience of Frank Mooney in Payne Whitney's October Mountain game preserve today.

Mooney and Eugene Mohawk were harvesting in Mr. Whitney's hay crop when they espied a little moose, just over the nine-foot fence.

Mooney leaped the fence and was petting the moose when the cow moose bounded from a spruce grove and made right for him. He had just time to climb a chestnut tree, out of reach of the animal.

For six hours the moose guarded the tree, refusing to be enticed away by Mohawk, who stayed outside the fence. Finally it occurred to the latter that the moose might be as charmed by a graphophone as he had been during the long winter evenings in the mountains.

He ran back to his house, half a mile away, got the machine, and within hearing distance of the cow, started up "Sweet Adeline."

The big moose listened to the music for a minute, then left the tree and ran towards the instrument. That gave Mooney his chance to escape.

PLOWING FIELDS WITH DYNAMITE

C. B. Edwards in Technical World.

J. Henry Caldwell, of Spartanburg, N.C., is the first man to utilize commercial dynamite in plowing land. The method of planting the cartridges was simple; one man walked ahead with a crowbar and struck it into the ground about three feet; the man following affixed a percussion cap to the stick of dynamite and two feet of fuse and thrust it into the hole with a rake handle finally leaving only the white fuse protruding. Incidentally the dynamite used was of the strength ordinarily used for blasting stumps and is not as costly as that used in quarries for the removing of rock.

After the planting of the dynamite charges a large crowd of the native population gathered near the field of operations to witness what they regarded as the novel whim of one of their most progressive farmers. The negroes of the locality did not know what to make of the proceedings and looked with awe upon the operations calculated to wrench from nature the productive crops she refused to yield to their simple methods. The exploding of the charged field was not without its amusing side. Many of the nearby neighbors, hearing that several hundred pounds of dynamite were to be exploded, removed household belongings and adjourned to their fartherest premises, window frames were taken out and the sheriff instructed to hold up the exploding of the charged field, made a formal call upon Mr. Caldwell to come to an agreement in regard to the inevitable damages which the neighbors felt sure would ensue.

In exploding the field, four rows were set off at a time, one man going rapidly down each row lighting fuses with a red hot iron as he went. The result was not unlike the setting off of a great bunch of firecrackers. The explosions came thick and fast and both the sub and surface soils were sent into the air in clouds, again falling on the land in a powdery mist and leaving periodical holes where the cartridges were planted about four and half feet [illegible] rows were set off at the same time the effect was quite awe-inspiring, the reports were blended into a continuous roar and the row of a dozen men lighting fuses were pursued by an ever rising wave of soil. The danger to the men lighting the fuses is trifling, as is shown by the photographs taken of the operations.

After the charges are exploded the field looks not unlike a great colander set with innumerable holes where the charges of dynamite were set, and the soil is broken up into unusually fine particles and well aerated. It is necessary to go over the field once more with a cultivator before the crops are put in, and then the operation is essentially like the ordinary farming methods.

PETERBORO' CANOE COMPANY PROPOSE $10,000 EXTENSION

The Peterborough Canoe Company intend enlarging their present plant, the work to begin this month, and according to the plans and specifications when completed, the building space and canoe shop will be practically doubled.

Mr. Duggan, industrial commissioner, is endeavoring to have the city sell a small strip of land, including a portion of the north side of King street, this land being necessary to the Peterborough Canoe Company before they can proceed with the building operations.

The dimensions of the proposed new addition are to be forty by eighty feet and will, when in working order, provide accommodation for much more extensive canoe building operations.

Mr. Duggan is exerting himself to obtain what the company desire, and the consent of the city must be obtained within the next two weeks as the company have other intentions in view if they are unable to obtain what they wish.

The reason why this strip of land in question is needed is owing to the angle in Water street where the street takes a bend.

The estimated cost of the new building is $10,000.

CHEESE MARKET ON DECLINE SAYS MONTREAL DESPATCH

Ever Since Shipment From Peterborough Last Week, When as High as 11 1-16 Cents Was Paid for Colored Cheese—Only Seventy Thousand Boxes Shipped From Montreal Last Week.

A Montreal dispatch says: — The market for cheese has been declining steadily ever since the meeting of the cheese board at Peterboro last week, when as high as 11 1-16 cts. per lb. was paid for colored cheese. In fact the demand throughout the past week ran very largely to colored cheese, and white was somewhat neglected by most of the traders, who seemed to be prepared to pay an eighth to a quarter cent more for colored goods offering at the various boards in the country, and as a consequence at every board in the country where both classes of cheese were sold, the colored fetched more money. The temporary shortage in the supply of colored seems to have been overcome, and there is not likely to be much if any premium paid for them over the price ruling for white cheese.

A SMALL SHIPMENT

The demand last week was very slow on the whole, and if it had not been for the demand for colored we should certainly have seen lower prices ruling all around in the country last week. The shipments from this part amounted to seventy thousand boxes, one of the smallest weeks of the season so far, indicating to some extent the slow trade of the past week. These conditions prevail this week and are already having some effects upon the course of prices in the country. At Campbellford on Tuesday morning the bulk of of the offerings sold at 10 11-16 cts. lb., but at Sterling in the afternoon 10 5-8 cts. was the top price paid, and only one or two buyers were prepared to pay this price, the bulk of the dealers offering much lower prices. Unless there is a speedy improvement in the demand from the other side prices in the country this week will not rule over 10 1-2 cts, some dealers looking for even lower prices.

STOCKS INCREASING

The receipts into Montreal last week were fairly heavy, the total by all gates aggregating 90,000 boxes Stocks are steadily increasing here and exercising a dampening effect upon the trade. The shipments have been running light for some time past and stocks have been steadily accumulating of late.

MAKE KEEPING UP

The butter market is fairly steady this week at prices a fraction under those current last week. The markets in the Eastern Townships sold at from 21 3-4 cts. to 23 1-4 cts., the latter price having been paid for some fancy factories around Cowansville. Finest selected Townships were selling on this market to-day at 22 3-4 cts.

WRECKED PASSENGERS REACH PRINCE RUPERT

A telegram received last night from Miss Wynnie Dobbin, brought the news that the shipwrecked passengers of the steamer Princess May, wrecked on the night of Friday, the 5th, off the Alaskan Coast, had reached Prince Rupert. Miss Dobbin is with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sawle, of the Prince Rupert Optimist. Vancouver papers give some additional particulars of the wreck, saying:—

At the time of the accident Capt. McLeod was in his berth and Pilot Richardson was on the bridge. The approach to Sentinel Rock at the southern end of Lynn Canal is one of the most perilous stretches of water in Alaska. A ship must clear the rocky islands on both sides, the smallest variation from the course entailing disaster.

The walls of the canal are precipitous and the waterway deep and in many places narrow. Sentinel Island, situated about four miles north and east of Shelter Island, is the key to the narrow passageway by Shelter Island. The passage is strewn with reefs and at some points is less than a mile in width. Sentinel Island is a jagged rock about 250 yards long, and with long, tooth-like reefs projecting at the north and south ends.

Pilot Richardson, who arrived here last night, said:

"We were going at twelve-knot speed." Owing to the haze which hung over the water it was difficult to see far ahead, and the rocks were not visible until we were almost upon them and it was too late to avoid a disaster."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Under the caption of "Infant Mortality Rate is High" you mention truly that death has been creating great ravages among the children of this city, especially among those under one year of age, and that not for many years has the rate been so high. Are our health officers aware of this dreadful state of things, and if not, why not? And what have they done to better our sanitary conditions?

Yours truly,

CANALEJAS SAYS CLERICAL TROUBLE IS POLITICAL

The Sum of Eighty Thousand Dollars Was Spent in Supplying Peasants With Meal Tickets During Demonstration—Was Intended to Exploit a Revolution.

Paris, Aug. 13.—The Paris Temps yesterday prints a long, sensational interview with Jose Canalejas Y. Mendes, the Spanish Prime Minister, covering the recent events which culminated in the severance of diplomatic relations between the Spanish Government and the Holy See as well as his future program, which, the paper says, the Premier dictated.

Premier Canalejas begins by declaring that the movement in the north of Spain is directed by rich Carlists, who are inveterate separists and enemies of the remainder of the country, and intransigeant Catholics, whose only program is the reign of Jesus Christ.

The Prime Minister affirms that he possesses knowledge that the committee behind the movement spent $80,000 in giving the manifestants of July 10 meal tickets, besides their railroad fares. After the manifestation, Canalejas says, the agitators organized juntas, "of which, and I announce this publicly for the first time, village priests are the leaders." He said that he officially protested to the Bishop of Vittoria and to the Vatican, but both replied that it was none of their concern. He says he will welcome interpellations of the Carlists, which will give him an opportunity to lay bare the detestable conspiracy against civilization, the king and the country.

"There is no religious question in Spain," the Premier continues. "It is simply an effort to exploit religious sentiment upon the ground, now disproved, that the Spanish majority is clerical. The majority, as was indisputably proved at the elections, is anti-clerical. Most of the municipalities sent addresses approving the Government's policy. I have received 150,000 telegrams urging me to continue this policy."

Senor Canalejas declares that he does not propose to abuse the power confided in him, but that he will use it resolutely to establish a preponderance of civil power. It is his intention to pass a law insuring neutral official education not hostile or favorable to any creed or philosophy, but free from any dogma. He insists that the policy of the Government is not directed against religious orders, but he would have them pay taxes, from which they are exempted by Conservative Governments, and the number of orders reduced.

"If I cannot reduce the number of orders by an agreement with the Vatican, I will by law," he declares.

The Premier expresses unqualified satisfaction at the reports that the Vatican now desires conciliation, and says he will make every effort to reach an agreement with the Holy See, but he maintains that the bill interdicting further orders cannot be withdrawn.

The Prime Minister declares the reports that his policies are inspired by the councils of the French Government and the royal family of England do great injustice to King Alfonso. He says: "One might as well say that the opinion of all foreign statesmen and the intellectuality of the world weigh upon the king, for there is not a single publication in civilization which does not applaud the dawn of a Liberal spirit and the laicization of Spain.

"The king in the present case obeys a profound conviction. He is a fervent Catholic, but his mind is open to grand ideas, and he is a serious student of contemporaneous civilization. He is a liberal, tolerant and truly constitutional, and, without forgetting his royal prerogatives, will follow popular impulsion. He give his confidence to a Ministry sustained by the majority of the cortes."

UNSANITARY CONDITIONS TYPHOID FEVER==INFANT MORTALITY HIGH

Dr. McPherson says, "Boil the water."

It's in fine shape to cause intestinal disorders. There are several cases of typhoid fever in town and it is well known that poor water and abundance of flies are largely contributing to a spread of this disease.

"Many babes are dying, doctor."

"That's so, it is terrible the infant mortality."

"The cause?"

"Without prejudice, I would say it was from infected milk. There are cases of milk that contain as much bacteria as ordinary sewage, after the milk is being delivered around for several hours on a hot day."

And in the meantime the Board of Health is inactive. It is responsible—what is it going to do? What inspection of milk is being made?

Dr. McPherson is a live member—but what of the Board of Health?

IS ONE PER CENT. LESS, BUT TARIFF IS HEAVIER

Conservative Leader Speaking at Sherbrooke, N.S., Contrasts the Customs Duties With Laurier's Promise of Reduction.

Sherbrooke, N.S., Aug. 13.—A great crowd gathered in this town to hear R. L. Borden and the other Conservative speakers. The Opposition leader was given a great ovation.

Mr. Borden opened his address by quoting Sir Wilfrid Laurier's promise, when in opposition, regarding the reduction of expenditure and taxation, as follows: "If we get into power, we will follow the example of Mr. Mackenzie, and I say that, although we may not be able to bring the expenditure to what it was under him, we can reduce the amount two, yes three million dollars per year."

"From 1900 to 1909, both inclusive, the total amount of taxes collected was $524,391,293, and from 1887 to 1896, both inclusive, the amount was $285,398,543. In 1896 the taxation per head amounted to $5.46. At the present time the taxation per head is over $10. The total taxation for 1896 amounted to $27,759,279, and the total taxation for the year 1910 amounted approximately to $75,482,580, or an increase of nearly $50,000,000.

"But it is claimed by Liberal speakers and Liberal organs that the customs duties have been reduced. The total net reduction in the tariff amounts to about 1 per cent., but under actual existing conditions the customs duties upon a pound or yard of any commodity imported into Canada are much heavier than they were in 1896.

"The price of all commodities imported into this country has largely advanced during the past ten years. This appreciation in price accounts for a portion of the increase in the volume of our foreign trade. The average increase of price would probably amount to 40 per cent.

"Assuming the duty to be 29 per cent., instead of 30 per cent., as before, you find that the total customs duty will be $40.60, or more than $10 in excess of the duty paid on the same quantity of the same article in 1896. Thus the total cost to the importer in 1910 would be $180.60.

"High prices are thus made still higher as customs duties must be paid on the increase of prices.

"The Conservative party does not object to Liberal expenditures, but it stands for the principle that public money should be expended only in the public interest, and that for every dollar paid the country should receive a dollar value.

"But the expenditure of the present Government has been guided in many instances by motives of party expediency rather than public interest.

"The estimates of last session represents three times the expenditure of fourteen years ago. In the interval the country has increased in population by no more than 50 per cent. The present administration has received from the people of this country because the money could come from no other source, $367,650,000 in excess of the amount which the late Conservative administration received during their last ten years of power. This excess revenue of $367,650,000 would have paid off the entire public debt of Canada in 1896 ($258,000,000) and have left $100,000,000 of excess revenue to meet the necessities of the public service during the past ten years. Not a dollar of the public debt has been paid off, but $78,000,000 have been added to it.

"Generous expenditure for wise public purposes can always be justified, but the record of the past fourteen years is that of spendthrifts and profligates."

WILL GO TO SOUTH AFRICA

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux Will Represent Canada There Sails for England Aug. 20.

Ottawa, Aug. 13.—Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Postmaster-General, has been appointed by the Government the official representative of Canada at the opening of the first Parliament of United South Africa. He will sail for England on Aug. 20. The South African Parliament opens on Oct. 5.

The Duke of Connaught will be the representative of His Majesty King George at the function, which event prevented his earlier arrival in Canada as Governor-General.

It is a commetary upon the cosmopolitan nature of the people who live under the protection of the British flag that the Premier of South Africa is a Boer, namely the famous Gen. Botha, while the representative of Canada is of French extraction. Delegates of other nationalities will also be there.

While Mr. Lemieux is in England he will confer with the Imperial authorities regarding the question of better and cheaper cable connection across the Atlantic. It is expected that a definite scheme will be formulated and adopted shortly. When this is accomplished the greater scheme of an all-red cable will be undertaken.

REMOVE VATICAN TO MONTREAL

Detroit, Aug. 13.—L. Corple-Mordaunt, formerly colonial manager of the British Colonial Press Association, passed through Detroit Thursday, in the course of an extensive tour of the country. He is among those who believe the growing rumor that campaign plans have been formed by the papal councillors to transfer the papacy to this side of the Atlantic, should the chain of painful events surrounding the Vatican in Europe add many more links.

"There is no question in my mind that the report is true," said he. "There are strong reasons to believe that the idea has been deeply considered to establish the papacy in Montreal whether it ever materializes or not. Those in a position to feel the pulse of events at Montreal expect stirring times within the next two years."

His view of the papal question is borne out in George Sylvester Viereck's "Confessions," just published, where Viereck claims to have been assured by one of the greatess statesmen of the German Empire that a plan of making America the seat of the papacy has been formed.

EXCLUSION OF AMERICAN FISHERMEN

The Hague, Aug. 13.—Senator Root, continuing his speech respecting the meaning of "bays" in the renunciation clause of the treaty of 1818, said that the negotiations onl yhad in view the exclusion of Americans from territorial waters within the usual three-mile limit. Britain never claimed the extension of her jurisdiction outside the limit in large bays. Senator Root recalled the fact that, in 1907, the Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Lord Fitzmaurice, declared in Parliament in the name of the Government that territorial waters were those within a distance of three sea miles from shore [illegible] bays with a breath of less than six sea miles, unless this limit were extended by long-established users under treaty or by special convention.

If the negotiations of the treaty of 1818 aimed at the exclusion of American fishermen from the great bays, Root continued, they would have employed other terms of definition such as "areas between headlands" which was the expression used to define larger bays. The treaty should be framed in such a way that the line of demarcation would be indicated as three sea miles from shore, otherwise fishermen never knew whether they were inside or outside protected waters.

MANITOBA GRAND LODGE GRANTED

Ottawa, Aug. 13.—The supreme lodge, Sons of England, decided upon an important new departure at yesterday's sitting, when a report by the general purpose committee in favor of acceding to Manitoba's request for the right to establish a provincial grand lodge was adopted. No official announcement was made as to the amount of financial assistance granted to Manitoba to establish a grand lodge, but it is understood that $500 was voted for that purpose, and that the supreme lodge will pay all claims on funeral fund for a period of six months.

Niagara Falls was chosen as the place where the grand lodge will meet in 1912. Among the places competing for the honor were Toronto, London and Vancouver.

WILL TENDER FOR CANADA'S NAVY

Ottawa, Aug. 13.—The British firms who have asked to be permitted to tender for the construction of the ships of the Canadian navy are Harland & Wolff, Swan & Hunter and Vickers, Sons' & Maxim.

The Canadian firms who have asked for the privilege of seeing the Admiralty plans are: The Polson Iron Works, Toronto; the British Columbia Marine Works, Victoria, and the Collingwood Shipbuilding Co.

CALGARY WELCOMES PREMIER

Reception Was on Mammoth Scale and Entirely Non-Partisan.

Calgory, Aug. 13.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier completed another leg in his western tour, when he arrived here at 1.30 yesterday afternoon. An immense crowd greeted the Premier, and Mayor Jamieson, on behalf of the city, read an address of welcome. In reply, Sir Wilfrid referred to the growth that had taken place since his last visit to Calgary, sixteen years ago, a growth he was not altogether prepared to see. He declared that Calgary was one of the commercial metroplises of the Dominion.

A pleasing incident occurred on the way from Red Deer. As the Premier's train was passing through Bowden at about ten miles an hour, a group of school children had gathered at the station. Sir Wilfrid appeared on the observation platform of his car, and was bowing pleasantly, when out of the crowd burst a young man bearing a bunch of flowers. He raced after the train and did not give up until he had placed the offering in the hands of the Premier, who leaned forward to receive it.

The reception was carried out on a mammoth scale, and was entirely non-partisan, among the prominent citizens [illegible] Conservative leader in the Provincial Legislature. A procession was formed and Sir Wilfrid escorted to Broemar Lodge, where he will enjoy a much-needed rest until to-night, when he will address a mass meeting at the Arena. He attended a public reception and lawn party at the barracks of the Mounted Police in the evening, and shook hands with hundreds of citizens anxious to do him honor.

The Maritime Province Association of Calgary tendered a banquet yesterday to E. M. Macdonald, at which that Parliamentarian made an eloquent appeal for united action by the east and west in up-building and strengthening the common country.

MAY BE SENT TO ASYLUM

Detroit, Aug. 13.—The police say that a medical examination will be made of Delaney, the former Windsor telegrapher, who on Wednesday night shot two of his fellow-operators in the Western Union office. Neither will prosecute Delaney, and the police say that they will not give him freedom, because of his mental condition. The Probate Court will be asked to order an examination with a view to having him committed to an asylum.

Arthur McArdle, one of the men shot, after a relapse that placed him in a critical condition Thursday, is again improving, and is expected to recover. Schwartz, who was wounded in the neck, is also doing well.

A Safety Submarine.

Paris, Aug. 13.—A submarine in three sections, the middle section being detachable and capable of rising to the surface, as a means of rescue in the case of accident, the invention of Chief Constructor Artur of the French navy, was launched yesterday at the Brest navy yard.

Trimming the Absentee Landlord.

Melbourne, Aug. 13.—A progressive tax on the unimproved value of land is provided for a bill read for the first time Thursday. It will provide that in case of an absentee landlord the tax will be a penny a pound throughout, with no exemptions.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

The Landgrave of Hesse will visit Canada.

M. Lesnin fell with his aeroplane in Belgium and was fatally injured.

Pickpockets reaped a rich harvest at the Irishmen's picnic at Port Stanley yesterday.

Lord Strathcona has subscribed five thousand dollars to the Campbelltou relief fund.

Appalling devastation has been wrought by floods in Japan. In Tokio alone 30,000 houses have been submerged.

D. D. Mann denies that the Canadian Northern had any arrangement with the Government over the Hudson Bay Railway.

Benny Prinz, a young balloonist, met a horrible death last evening at the close of the aviation meet at Asbury Park, N.J. In making a double parachute drop, the second parachute failed to open, and he fell more than 2,000 feet.

Capt. J. W. Woods has been appointed colonel of the Governor-General's Foot Guards of Ottawa, in place of Col. Street, who is retiring. The new colonel has promised to take the regiment on a trip to the old country next year.

Benjamin De Witt, an elderly man, giving his home as Quebec, was discovered Thursday night in a warehouse at Niles, Mich., where he had been for four days and nights. When rescued he was in a dying condition from starvation.

GRAND TRUNK HAS A SURPLUS

London, Aug. 13.—G.T.R. gross receipts for the half year are £3,321,600; working expenses, including reduction of £120,000 in engine, car renewal expense account, £2,456,000; net receipts, £65,600.

After meeting revenue charges and deducting deficiencies on working the Canada Atlantic and Detroit and Grand Haven, there is a surplus of £47,200. This, with £11,800 brought forward, enables the company to pay full dividends on the 4 per cent. guaranteed first and second preference stock; £12,000 is carried forward.

The Great Western, with balance forward, shows surplus sufficient to meet interest on the first mortgage bonds, leaving £17,200 carried forward.

Of expense account there should now remain only £77,000 to be wiped out during the current half year. During the second half of last year £260,000 of revenue was absorbed by this account, and the difference of £133,000 in favor of the current year should go a long way toward counteracting the strike loss and higher wages bill.

PULLMAN RATES EXORBITANT

Washington, Aug. 13.—Allegations that the rates exacted by the Pullman Co. for upper berths in sleeping cars are exorbitant, were made in a petition filed yesterday with the Interstate Commerce Commission by the State of Indiana.

The complaint is directed against the Pullman Co. and practically all the railroads operating in Central Traffic Association territory. It is urged in the petition that upper berths in Pullman sleeping cars are not worth more than 50 per cent. of the lower berths, but, notwithstanding that, the Pullman Co. and other defendants, exact an exorbitant charge for upper berths from points in Ohio, Illinois, Michigan and Kentucky to and from points in Iowa and Indiana.

MERRY DEL VAL REPLACED

Rome, Aug. 13.—It is stated here that Cardinal Rampolla, former papal secretary of state, has accepted the provisional direction of the policy of the Vatican, replacing Cardinal Merry del Val, who will, however, retain the rank and title of secretary of state. It is said that Cardinal Rampolla has advised the Pope to make concessions all along the line to Spain.

According to reports received at the Vatican, the Catholic organization on the Spanish peninsula is perfect, mak- it impossible for Premier Canalejas of Spain to bring about a complete separation of church and state as was done in France. Some of these reports state that only a word from Rome would be necessary to have the whole population rise and sweep away all the enemies of the church.

Soldiers to Fight Fires.

Washington, Aug. 13.—Major-Gen. Leonard Wood, chief of staff of the army, has directed that two battalions of the 25th Infantry be withdrawn from manoeuvres at American Lake camp, Washington, and return immediately to Fort Wright at Spokane, [illegible] to fight forest fires along the line of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific railways in Western Montana, Northern Idaho and Flathead Indian reservation.

THREE PERISHED IN THE DISASTER

Toronto, Aug. 13.—The aftermath of the disaster on the bay Thursday night in which the ferryboat Mayflower ran down the yacht Directoire, shows that two of the girls who were reported safe lost their lives in the wreck.

They are Miss Margaret Jaffray of 17 Hannah street, and Miss Scully of Windsor, Ont. It was at first believed that the girls were at the Island, but yesterday it was discovered that they had never been taken from the water. Their bodies, along with that of Jack Pearce, the third victim, were recovered yesterday.

WAS BADLY FRIGHTENED

Lindsay, Aug. 13.—A pedlar from Toronto is badly frightened because of what he believes was an attempt on his life. He says he was fired at twice Thursday night by someone concealed in Victoria Park.

He was walking on Kent street, past Victoria Park, when he heard a report from a gun and a bullet whizzed by. He started to run, and a second shot went speeding by his head, causing him to increase his speed.

FISH HATCHERIES FOR CAPE BRETON

Halifax, N.S., Aug. 13.—John Neville, whose firm controls the lobster fishing on the south shore of Cape Breton, states that he has a definite assurance from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the Government will next year establish a series of fish hatcheries in Cape Breton in pursuance of the move made in Parliament last session. He estimates next year's lobster fishing will be the greatest in the history of Cape Breton.

C.P.R. TRAIN WRECKED

Passenger Ditched Near Caledon—Two Persons Hurt.

Orangevile, Aug. 13.—The last car of a C.P.R. passenger train containing twenty-five people bound for the west, was ditched at Horse Shoe Curve, within a few miles of Caledon shortly before eleven o'clock yesterday morning. The injured are:

Mrs. Colbeck of Grand Valley, aged 70, ribs broken and otherwise hurt.

Clifford Day of Teeswater, aged 19, leg badly crushed.

The accident occurred almost on the spot of several railroad fatalities. Five of the six coaches, all laden with harvesters and their relatives, succeeded in rounding the curve, but the last car jumped the track and rolled over in the ditch. Young Daly jumped from the front end of the coach as it rolled over, but it pinned his leg beneath one of the corners.

Both the injured were treated by Dr. McFadden of this town and were taken to the Western Hospital, Toronto.

A chum of Day's Samuel Bell of Teeswater, happened to go into the car ahead a moment before the accident. The move probably saved him from injury.

EMPEROR OF THE BRITISH

London, Aug. 13.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Express prints answers from Canadian mayors in regard to its suggestion that the King should be crowned Emperor of the British. Mayor Geary of Toronto says that such a change would not be contrary to the wishes of the people of Canada, and takes the opportunity to reassure The Express that there are many other links between the Dominion and the home land than the King. Mayor Chisholm of Halifax sees no advantage in the change.

YOUTHFUL DEPRAVITY

Cornwall, Aug. 13.—A case of youthful depravity was brought to the attention of the police this week. It seems that an 11-year-old lad named Marshall was shamefully abused by two other boys, who, in Apache style, bound him to a tree in the wooded part of a pasture and slashed his bare legs with Scotch thistles. The two culprits were before the police magistrate and their mothers advised to look after them, else they would be taken charge of by the authorities.

A BOAT LOAD OF BISHOPS

London, Aug. 13.—The special copy of the Book of Common Prayer which the King is presenting to the Church of England in Canada on its bi-centenary celebration is being taken out by the Bishop of London, Rev. A. F. Ingram, who sails on the Empress of Britain.

The Archbishop of Westminster, the Roman Catholic primate of England, acompanied by Father Jackman and Mgr. Joseph Batt, are also passengers on the same steamer.

WITH BOYNE WATER

An interesting and unique event took place in the True Blue Hall at Westboro, Ont., when the infant son of Bro. W. B. and Mrs. Scobie was christened with water taken from the famous Boyne River. Now, one would naturally imagine that this youth of tender age to become an Orangeman of note, a worshipful master of some leading lodge. It would be painful to the parents if he became a priest. But stranger things have happened. Think of the many clergymen's sons who have disgraced their father's names, who have been renegades, thieves, prize fighters and prisoners or fugitives from justice.

A WONDERFUL INVENTION

In another column of the Review appears as interesting bit of information as one would want to read. Louis Bull, a Young American scientist, who has gone to Paris, has perfected an ultra-rapid cinematigraphic machine capable of taking 2,000 pictures a second. The course of a rifle bullet through a soap bubble, the growth of plants, the separate movement of the wing of the bee or fly. Will some one next come with the announcement, "I can photograph the thoughts of the mind," for thoughts are indeed things most tangible.

"TO KEEP HOTEL."

Brantford is dry. That is, no booze is sold [illegible]. It was not not always [illegible]. The hotelmen have resolved to keep hotel. A day or two ago as recorded in another column of this paper they called in Chief Slemin and License Inspector Eacretti in conference. The hotel men promised to notify the police as soon as an undesirable entered the bar or lounged about the hotel. They also decided to raise the rates and the cheapest hotel in Brantford is $1.50 a day.

Why should not hotels keep dry after hours. The moment they commence breaking the law in that moment they commence their own self-destruction.

FROZEN EGGS

Philadelphia, Aug. 11.—As the result of an experiment upon a guinea pig that died after being innoculated with frozen eggs, J. Buschel, a large dealer of this city is under arrest on a warrant obtained by the State Dairy and Food Department on a charge of selling eggs unfit for food purposes.

Harry P. Cassidy, special agent of the Dairy and Food Department, alleges that Buschel sells frozen eggs that have been removed from the shells and in a solid body are disposed of to bakeries, which thaw out the product. The samples seized were examined by bacteriologists. They innoculated the guinea pig with the frozen eggs and it died within twelve hours. Two other dealers were also held for a hearing on charges of selling eggs unfit for use.

Now, this is hard on the guinea pig. But what are a few guinea pigs to a human life. They die, are burned or buried and forgotten, and the next few days there will be no rotten, frozen eggs sold in Philadelphia.

In Peterborough there have recently died a number of babes. Now, that is hard on the mothers. We have no expert bacteriologist in our midst. But we have a Council and a Board of Health. If the Council will not improve the sanitary conditions of Peterborough the Board of Health should. Garbage and refuse, the breeding spot of the fly, piles up here and there unmolested. The fly poisons the milk or crawls on the child, who sucks its fingers immediately. But what is a dead child or two to a little money needed in cleaning up the dirty spots in Peterborough? Some voter might be offended.

DON'T PAVE GEORGE STREET

Those who are so anxious to pave George street should sit down first and count the price.

Now what would that white winged brigade cost to remove the rubbish and manure?

Would it help the merchants?

It might the owners.

And manure dust from pavements is said to taste twice as bad as manure and earth.

And it is twice as hard on the eyes.

And then Jack Frost has something to say in the matter. He occasionally gets on a rampage and lifts up a few yards of pavement just for devilment. That means a lot of money for repair.

The forefathers have beat back the bush and cleared the way and given good roads.

As is already said: Lets' leave some of the luxuries for our posterity. Don't bleed those who pay the shot too hard.

QUEEN'S OWN ABROAD

We are sending our Flesh and Blood to the Old Land so that they can better learn to kill. They are not going to learn to become more tractable, or gentle, but how best to put some husband, son or brother out of existence, in case there is any trouble with any one whose flag is not our flag. They are patriotic. So are we, but peace hath her victories no less than war, and if the Mendelssohn Choir goes to England next year that will be a trip worth enthusing over. Fighting is all right. But the private soldier is the one who suffers. The Big Bug soldier, the chief medicine man, who is planning it all, is away in the rear with his telescope or glass. He gets the glory, the private gets shot. If we must be soldiers, then let it be in the grub department.

This is what Maurice Hewitt says of war;—

> "If ever such a stroke can be dealt that the pestilence of war be abated in Europe suddenly and firmly, it will be dealt by the working class. No other can do it; not the aristocracy, for by their caste they may not; nor the bureaucracy, for under their rules they will not; nor kings, for they are negligible in these days; nor the Church, for that serves time and has no other God but him; nor Parliament nor diet, for they serve the newspapers, for they serve themselves."

THAT WESTERN TRIP

How the habitants would listen with surprise to the statements of the man who holds the reins of power to-day by the skill with which he plays upon the race and creed prejudices of the people of the Province of Quebec. Since 1896 Sir Wilfrid Laurier has held office by reason of the steady majority he draws from Quebec, and when the time comes once more he will quickly forget these expressions of love and crawl to his familiar role of stirrer up of the fires of racial and religious prejudice.

Then at Regina, where there are a great many settlers who have arrived in Canada recently from the other side of the border, Sir Wilfrid changed his tune once more. He played upon their home prejudices and told them they had found in Canada a greater democracy than the country of their birth. As a sop to their feelings of home-sickness he even informed them that the King of England has less power than the President of the United States. "We have no distinction of race or creed here," he said, and with his Quebec record staring him in the face it must have taken quite a lot of mental juggling to enable the Premier to convince even himself, much less the audience he was addressing.

The west, to use an ordinary every-day phrase, is "on" to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The day has passed when the Premier can jolly the people of Canada at will. His skill is not waning possibly, but the country wants more than mere oratory and broken promises. It wants intelligent statesmanship to guide the ship of state aright. Sir Wilfrid Laurier will come back from the west undoubtedly impressed with the potentialities of that portion of the Dominion. He should also bring back a realization of the fact that the people cannot be fooled all the time, and the inevitable reaction must come. Too long has the grafter run riot over Canada. Laurierism and graft go hand in hand. The public resources, vast as they are, are being made the happy hunting ground of hordes of Liberal hangers-on, and this the west knows to its loss. More statesmanship and less graft should be a winning cry of the Conservative party at the next elections.

GOOD WORK REWARDED

The Port Hope Times says that Joseph Patrick Downey, M.P.P., has been rewarded for faithful service to his party. The position given Mr. Downey is worth $2,600 a year with house and supplies. The position—chief of the asylum for idiots at Orillia. Now, isn't the laborer worthy of his hire? Joe is a strong man and did much good service for the Conservatives. Should the position be given to a mutt? Who knows but what Joseph Patrick will yet evolve a plan to cure the now-called incurable insane? His heart is in philanthropic work among the poor and down-and-outs. He will make good.

VIATOR SPEAKS

Viator writes a letter in complaint of reckless auto drivers. He escaped by his coat tails. Ah! blessing in disguise. Had he a Prince Albert he would have been caught and twisted to earth. Had he worn a silk hat he would have been instantly killed. What right have we, the common people, to dictate to owners of automobiles as to what speed they should travel. To them the fun—to us the dust.

THINGS REVERSED

J. J. Groves was born in slavery in Green County, Kentucky, on 1859. When the war was over Groves stayed with his master for a few years, married and purchased a bit of land To-day he owns a twenty-two roomed house, costing $22,000, is worth one million dollars, is master instead of slave. Every province, every large city, has seen the spectacle exactly the opposite to this. The rich man's son going through his inheritance till to-day he is no longer master, but slave of some habit that makes him worse than slave, but prisoner, a prisoner without hope.

ONE THOUSAND A WEEK

New York, Aug. 6.—Herbert M. Horkeimer, manager of the All Star Booking agency, announced yesterday that he had telegraphed to Ethel Leneve in Quebec, offering her a twenty weeks' engagement at $1,000 a week if she is free and accepts. He says he intends to have her appear in a play based on the Crippen case.

One thousand dollars a week offered because she is mixed up with a supposed murderer.

One thousand dollars a week just because she wore pants, and has been featured in the papers.

Yes, we condemn her but nearly every mother's son of us would pay 50 cents to see her perform and give 50 cents more for her photograph.

And away out west, so the papers tell us, is a woman scrubbing stores and offices so that she may support her five children while her husband gets a start on a homestead. Once a week she walks 35 miles to carry him supplies. She is honest and honorable. Now, how many of us would help her to get a pail of scrubbing water? Blame few.

THE POET OF THE PEOPLE

Now we read of J. Whitcomb Riley's lying near death's door—Mark Twain made us laugh, Riley made us feel that he was one of us. He told us just what we knew, just how we felt;—

"Cheerie up my dearie,
In the years that are to be,
Days of fair serenity
Will dawn for you and me.
For we know that every morrow
May not be sad,
So forgetting all the sorrow
We have had:
Let us fold away our fears,
And putting by our foolish tears,
Through all the coming years,
Just be glad."

This is the stuff through which J. Whitcomb Riley has sung himself into the hearts of the English-speaking race.

The world loves Riley. It only admired Goldwin Smith.

The nostrils of residents on the St. Paul street Hill are wide open to-day, inhaling the peculiar perfumes of crude oil, which was sprinkled on the roadway this morning. There may be the odor of oil, but there is no taste of dust. The oil was sprinkled from St. Paul street to the bridge by one of the city sprinkling carts this morning. This is the first oil sprinkling in the city.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

"School? Do you mean to tell me that you went to school with her? Where?"

"In Pennsylvania first, then in Milan. Read."

O Cara Mia—If only you knew how sorry I am to miss you! Why must you sail at once? Why not come to my beautiful Venice? I have so much to say [illegible] written. You ask about the adventure. Pouf goes my little dream of greatness. It was a blank failure. The officials put unheard of obstacles in our [illegible] contracts were utterly disregarded. In the first place, we had not purchased our costumes and scenery in Italy.

"Costumes and scenery?" Hillard sought the signature again.

The base of all the trouble was a clerk in the consulate at Naples. He wrote us that there would be no duties on costumes and scenery. Alas, the manager and his backer are on the way to America, sadder and wiser men! We surrendered our return tickets to the chorus and sent them home. The rest of us are stranded—is not that the word?—here in Venice, waiting for money from home. If I were alone, it would be highly amusing, but these poor people with me! There is only one way I can help them, but that—never! You recollect that my personal income is quarterly, and it will be two months before I shall have funds. There are persons moving heaven and earth to find me. My companions haven't the least idea who I am. So here we all are, wandering about the Piazza San Marco, calling at Cook's every day in hopes of money. I am staying with my maid in the Campo Santa Maria Formosa, near our beloved Santa Barbara. I have guaranteed the credit of my companions, and they believe that Venetians are generous people. Generous! Perhaps you will wonder how I dared appear on the stage in Italy. A black wig and a theatrical [illegible] were sufficient. A duke sent me an invitation to take supper with him, as if I were a ballerina! I sent one of the American chorus girls, a little minx for mischief. She ate his supper and then ran away. I understand that he was furious. Only a few months more, Nell, and then I may come and go as I please. Come to Venice. CAPRICCIOSA.

Hillard did not stir. Another labyrinth to this mystery! Capricciosa—Kitty Killigrew's unknown prima donna, and all he had to do was to take the morning train for Venice, and twenty-four hours later he would be prowling through the Campo Santa Maria Formosa.

Mrs. Sandford observed him curiously, even sadly. Why couldn't his fancy have been charmed by an everyday, sensible girl and not by this whimsical, extraordinary woman who fooled diplomats, flaunted dukes and kept a king at arm's length as a pastime? And yet—

"Capricciosa," he mused aloud. "That is not her name."

"And I shall not tell it you."

"But her given name? Just a straw, something to hold on. I'm a drowning man."

"It is Hilda."

"That is German."

"She prefers it to Sonia."

"Sonia Hilda. It begins well. May I keep this letter?"

"Certainly not. With that cara mia? Give it to me."

He did so. "Shall I seek her?"

"This is my advice—don't think of her after tonight. If you ever see or recognize her, avoid her. It may sound theatrical, but she is the innocent cause of two deaths. These men sought her openly too."

"What has she done?"

"She made a great though common mistake."

"Political?"

"Don't be foolish. I am sorry I let you see the letter. I forgot that she told me her hiding place."

"Her hiding place?"

"Mr. Hillard, she is as far removed from your orbit as Mars' is from Jupiter's. Forget her."

"My orbit is not limited. I shall seek her. When I find her I shall marry her."

"I like you too much, Mr. Hillard, to stand by and see you break your heart against a stone wall."

"Don't you see, the deeper the mystery is the more powerful the attraction becomes?"

The door to the lift opened and closed noisily, and Hillard turned negligently. A man sauntered through the room. The moment he came into the light Hillard's interest became lively enough. It was the handsome Italian with the scar.

"Who is that man?" he whispered. "Only a few weeks ago I bumped into him on coming out of the club."

"Do not attract his attention," she answered.

"Who is he?" he repeated.

"A Venetian officer and a profligate. I entertained him once, but I learned from him that I had been ill advised."

Hillard saw that this subject would admit of no further questions. The man with the scar had committed some inexcusable offense, and Mrs. Sandford had crossed him off the list.

It was after 10 when Hillard and his friend took their leave.

"We shall leave in the morning for Venice," said Hillard.

"Venice? How about Rome and Florence?"

"Which would you prefer, Rome and the antiquities or Venice and—Kitty Killigrew?"

"Kitty in Venice? Are you sure?"

"She is there with La Signorina Capricciosa. Oh, this is a fine world, after all, and I was wrong to speak ill of it this morning."

"If Kitty's in Venice I'm an ungrateful beggar too. But I do not see why Kitty's being in Venice excites you."

"No? Well, fate writes that Kitty's

Two dignified carabinieri rose quickly.

mysterious prima donna and my lady of the mask are one and the same person."

"No!"

The two without further words marched along the middle of the Corso to the hotel. The concierge started toward them, but suddenly reconsidered and retreated to his bandbox of an office. The strangeness of his movements passed unnoticed by the two men, who continued on through the lobby into the first corridor. Hillard inserted his key in the door of his room and swung it inward. He paused on the threshold with good cause.

[illegible] carabinieri rose quickly and approached Hillard. There was something [illegible] flashing eyes and set jaws that made him realize that the safest thing for [illegible] ment was to stand perfectly still.

CHAPTER X.

CARABINIERI.

"SIGNORI," began Hillard calmly, "before you act will you not do me the honor to explain this visit?"

"It is not he!" said one of the carabinieri. "It is the master, and not the servant. This is Signor Hillar, is it not?" he continued, addressing himself to Hillard. "The signor has a servant by the name of Giovanni?"

"Yes. And what has he done to warrant this visit?"

"It is a matter of seven years," answered the spokesman. "Your servant attempted to kill an officer in Rome. Luigi here, who was then interested in the case in Rome, thought he recognized Giovanni in the street today. Inquiries led us here."

"At any rate, it looks as though Giovanni had been forewarned of your visit," answered Hillard. "And may I ask what is the name of the officer Giovanni attempted to kill?"

"It is not necessary that you should know."

Hillard accepted the rebuke with becoming grace.

"And now, signor," with the utmost courtesy, "permit us to apologize for this intrusion. We shall wait in the hall, and if we find Giovanni we shall gladly notify you of the event."

"Hello! What's this?" exclaimed Hillard, going to the table when the officers had gone. It was a note addressed to him:

My Kind Master—The carabinieri are after me. But rest easy. I was not born to rot in a dungeon. I am going north. As for my clothes, send them to Giacamo, the baker, who lives on the road to El Deserta. He will understand. May the Holy Mother guard you should we never meet again!

Hillard passed the note to Merrihew.

"That's too bad. I've taken a great fancy to him. It seems that the peasant has no chance on this side of the water. His child a painted dancer in Paris and a price on his own head! It's hard luck. And the fellow who caused all this trouble goes free."

"He always goes free, Dan, here or elsewhere."

"Why, we'd have lynched him in America."

"That's possible. We are such an impulsive race," ironically. "Yes, no doubt we'd have lynched him, and these foreigners would have added another ounce of fact to their belief that we are still barbarians."

"I hadn't thought of that," Merrihew admitted.

Merrihew became impatient.

"Now out with it. Where and how did you learn that Kitty is in Venice?"

Hillard told him briefly.

"And so they are all in Venice, broke? By George, here's our chance—everlasting gratitude and all that! We'll bail 'em out and ship 'em home! How is that for a bright idea?"

"Let me see," said Hillard practically. "There are five of them—five hundred for tickets and doubtless five hundred more for unpaid hotel bills. It would never do, Dan, unless we wish to go home with them."

"But I haven't touched my letter of credit yet. I could get along on two thousand."

"Not with the brand of cigars you are smoking, 30 cents each."

"No; we can't bail them out, but we can ease up their bills till money comes from home. Not one of them by this time will have a watch. O'Mally will remain sober from dire necessity. Poor Kitty Killigrew! All the wonderful shops and not a stiver in her pockets!"

Merrihew paced the floor for some time, his head full of impossible schemes. He stopped in the middle of the room with an abruptness which portended something.

"I have it. Instead of going directly to Venice, we'll change the route and go to Monte Carlo. I'll risk my four hundred, and if I win"—

"Then the announcement cards, a house wedding and pictures in the New York papers. Dan, you are impossible. You have gambled enough to know that when you are careless of results you win, but never when you need the cash. But it is Monte Carlo if you say so. Two or three days there will cure you of your beautiful dream. After all," with a second thought, "it's a good [illegible] might be just your luck to win. The masquerading lady? [illegible] is."

Merrihew danced a jig. Hillard stepped to the mirror and bowed profoundly. The jig ceased.

"Madame, permit me, a comparative stranger, to offer you passage money home. We won it at Monte Carlo. It is yours. Polite enough," mused Hillard, "but hanged if it sounds proper."

"To the deuce with propriety!" cried Merrihew buoyantly. "We'll start tomorrow?"

From her window Kitty looked down on the Campo, which lay patched with black shadows and moonshine. How still at night was this fairy city in the sea! There were no horses clattering over the stone pavements, no trains, no omnibuses. The stillness which was of peace lay over all things. And some of this had entered Kitty's heart.

DROWNED IN WELL

Buffalo, Aug. 11—A Buffalo man named Stolz suicided at the Falls, and when his wife was told she became hysterical.

"Just as I expected!" she shrieked. "I knew that something was going to happen. I had a dream last night in which I saw him dashing over the Falls. I saw his body carried over the rapids and finally disappear."

The woman sobbed. She turned to the stairway and called to her daughter Ruth to come to her.

"Something dreadful has happened to your father," remarked the woman as she tried to control herself.

"What?" asked the daughter.

"He's been hurt," replied the mother.

Then when the truth was told the girl broke down and cried as though her heart would break. She was too overcome for words.

A policeman from the Genesee street station broke the news in an official manner some time later.

Stolz has been out of work for a long time. He has been despondent and has been suffering with insomina. He was 40 years old and was a member of several secret and insurance societies.

According to the widow, he went down town early yesterday morning to take care of an accident insurance policy that he had been carrying for some time.

"I knew that he was not strong," she said last night, "but I believed that I could trust him to go alone. He has not been back, and the man who went over the Falls must have been he."

The world's Esperanto Congress is to meet in Washington next week, when some 700 or 800 delegates will be in attendance.

WHEN BABY'S LIFE IS MOST IN DANGER

Summer is the season when the mother finds it most difficult to keep her little ones well. The complaints that afflict the babies during the hot summer months come on so quickly and so unexpectedly that often it is too late before the mother realizes that her baby is anything but well. In summer the mother should make a special effort to keep baby's bowels regular and his little stomach sweet and pure, for this is the secret of successfully warding off those dangerous summer complaints. The mother will find a great friend in Baby's Own Tablets during the hot weather. These Tablets regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and thus ward off or cure cholera infantum, diarrhoea, colic, vomiting, etc. Mrs. Wm. Sinclair, Bonaventure River, Que., writes: "I can highly recommend Baby's Own Tablets, as they have done my baby much good." The Eye

The human eye is the most valuable organ in the body. It is delicate, easily injured and deceptive, too, for it often seems "all right" when very much wrong. The result is neglect at very critical periods, with the inevitable result of injury.

A LITTLE MORE LIGHT

Mayor Morrow was seen to-day, and he referred to the matter of the streets paving as discussed in the Daily Review. He said that in some respects the conclusions reached were erroneous as to the cost of the pavement as assessed on the properties. That, for instance, the Street Railway will double track the street, and pay for the pavement between the rails and one foot outside, each side, some sixteen ft. That the rest of the street width would be assessed, as to costs, between the properties on each side. Also that the debentures would be issued for ten years, as is done in other places, and not for thirty years. Mayor Morrow will take the matter up, on his return, and will confer with the merchants and others interested, before anything is done, as he has no other object than to carry out the wishes of the people.

Mr R. Bangham, of the Ontario Asphalt Block Co, and who has many years experience in paving gave some interesting facts and argument as to the need for paving, and told of the satisfaction expressed by municipalities that have gone in for it. He claims that macadam, all around, is as expensive as a proper paving and not nearly as satisfactory.

HECLA FURNACE

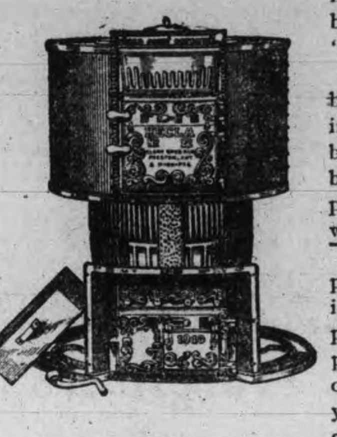
Shows A Saving in Fuel of 13½%

It is not what a furnace should do, nor what it is said to do—but what it has actually done for others and will do for you—that should hold your consideration.

"Hecla" Furnace is truly economical—in first cost and operation.

"Hecla" Furnace has a steel ribbed Firepot. By adapting the principle of Fused Joints to the firepot, we fuse Steel Ribs on the outer surface of the "Hecla" firepot, thus getting three times the radiating surface of any other firepot of the same size. The radiating surface of the firepot is the most efficient part of the furnace because it is in closest contact with the fire. And the greater the radiating surface, the greater the amount of air that can be heated by a given amount of fuel.

By a careful, accurate three years test, these Steel Ribbed



Firepots made an actual saving in fuel of 13½%. And remember, that the air from the "Hecla" is never hot.

The perfect radiation of heat brings warm air—fresh and invigorating—into the house, because "Hecla" firepot never becomes red hot. And a firepot that never becomes red hot won't burn out.

We make the firepot in two pieces which prevents cracking. This Steel Ribbed Firepot is only one of many improvements perfected by the old reliable firm who have 59 years heating experience to guide them.

Send us a rough diagram of your house—and we will plan the heating arrangements, giving you the cost of installing the right "Hecla" Furnace to heat your home right. We make no charge for this service. 102

OFT IN THE STILLY NIGHT

Last night the residents of a certain section in this city were entertained (?) by a cow with a grievance, who plainly tried to call the public's attention to said grief by bawling regularly three times every minute, viz., 180 calls per hour, or 1,440 between the hours of 10 p.m. Friday and 6 a.m. Saturday, just about the time when useful citizens are indulging in nature's restorative. One angry man, who, by the way, goes to church regularly at least twice a year (at a nickel per visit), and who has heard something of the virtue of forgiveness, wants to know which he must forgive—the cow or the owner. If the latter is a bigger man forgiveness would be the wiser move, and as for the old red cow, for that must be its color, our friend felt very much like consigning it to a place, where red, we are told, is the predominating tint.

WHEN WE WERE NOT SO OLD

Alderman John Turner is esteemed to tell stories that are truthful. More, he is known to actually do so. Alderman Turner's word will be taken for any fact either of romance, history or business. And that is saying a good deal for the syndicate of aldermen.

Recalling some incidents of the past, and referring to the days when the Grand Trunk trains reached Lakefield by way of Downer's Corners and the old Cobourg and Peterbroough right of way, Alderman Turner relates the following anecdote of travel.

One day a stranger, bound for the Stony Lake waters, and needing some camping accessories—which it may be here said, Alderman Turner supplies of the best—came to the store and bought. He enquired how he was to reach Lakefield, and was directed to the Grand Trunk station. The train going out at two o'clock, and Turner having a batch of goods going up the lake, Alderman Turner—plain John Turner at that time—drove over to Ashburnham, caught the train at the street crossing, dumped on his load and turned, being a Turner, to drive back. A man approached him and asked him if this was Lakefield.

"No," said Mr. Turner, "you're about ten miles from it." And then he saw it was his friend and customer of the morning. "What in the world," he asked, "are you doing here, you ought to be in Lakefield. What did you get off here for."

"Why, darn it," said the man, "you told me it was about thirty minutes run, and I've been on this caravan now for over forty minutes. I thought I ought to be there and got off."

The presence of mind which characterizes Alderman Turner when engaged in conciloric debate, was then a part of his make up. He bundled the stranger into the delivery waggon, broke the speed limit, and reached Nassau in time to catch the train, and make one man happy. Fact.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Is it necessary that an accident should take place before steps are taken to limit the speed at which automobiles and motor bicycles are driven through our streets? Ignorant or criminally careless boys (names at present omitted) are making our thoroughfares dangerous for both elderly people and for children. Why should a small percentage of ostentatious possessors of automobiles terrorize the rest of the community? The fact that they are apparently sufficiently well-to-do to own such a vehicle should make them considerate of the feelings limbs and rights of those less fortuante whose poverty is sufficiently advertised by the contrast to entitle them to ask that they be allowed to continue their obscure existence and faltering steps unnoticed and [illegible]ed.

VIATOR.

BOGUS COINS THAT ARE NOT BOGUS

St. Catharines, Aug. 12.—This city and other towns in the Niagara district are being flooded with bogus 25 and 50-cent pieces. The banks are warning people to look out for the bad money. The counterfeits are excellent imitations of the genuine coins and it is said about the only way to detect them, as they ring true, is through a slight oversight on the part of the maker. In the genuine coins the crowned head is upside down when the reverse side is read, in the spurious ones both sides are topped the same. It is believed the bogus coins were manufactured in Buffalo and this district is being planted with them first.

Mr. J. H. Ferguson, the manager of the local branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia, when seen by the Review today, said he had received quarters such as described above, and stated they were not bogus, but were sent out by the Canadian mint.

He did not know why the change in the position of the head was made on the new coins, but presumed that it was done so in order to distinguish them from those from the English mint.

Hence another sensation explodes.

ELDERLY LADY INJURED; MATTRESS FELL ON HER FROM 2nd STORY WINDOW

Mrs. Condon, an elderly lady, of Douro, had her head badly bruised and cut [illegible] afternoon. While standing under the upper storey window of the Peterborough Mattress Company's factory on Hunter street, a mattress fell from the second window, a corner of it striking her on the top of the head.

She was stunned for a few minutes and the wound bled profusely. A gentleman who was passing rendered first aid. The wound, while not serious, was painful. Her husband called for her and she was driven home.

The gentleman who bound up the wound is a New York newspaper man who is in the city.

An August Bride

KIDD—PALLIN

The home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Pallin, Evergreen Terrace, Jermyn, was the scene of a pretty wedding on Wednesday, the 10th inst., at 10 o'clock, when their youngest daughter, Miss Caroline Elizabeth, was united in holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. Frederick A. Kidd, of Indian River, formerly of Vancouver. The ceremony was performed in the beautifully decorated drawing room under an arch of ferns and hydranges. The officiating minster being Rev. Mr. Johnston of Keene Methodist Church. The bride was given away by her father and the wedding march was played by Miss Fannie Pallin, sister of the bride. The bride looked very pretty in a dress of white silk mull with trimmings of pointed lace and insertion and wearing the customary veil with orange blossoms and carrrying a shower bouquet of white roses and carnations and wearing an amethyst necklace, the gift of the groom. The young couple being unattended.

After the ceremony and hearty congratulations were bestowed upon the young people, the guests sat down to a sumptuous wedding repast. The large number of useful and costly presents testified to the high esteem in which the bride was held. She was one of Jermyn's most pouplar young ladies and will be greatly missed.

Mr. and Mrs. Kidd left on the 2.09 p.m. G. T. R. train amid showers of confetti and good wishes for the Thousand Islands. The bride travelled in a canard tailored suit with hat to match. After the honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Kidd will reside at 561 Bethune Street, Peterborough.

SCOTLAND YARD INSPECTOR IN THIS VICINITY THURSDAY

It was suspected on Thursday that Inspector Dew of the Scotland Yard, and the man who gave Crippen the over-ocean chase, was in this vicinity, but inquiries in the matter were of no avail, and when the Review reporter, in his query for facts, suggested that he was the idea was scouted. When there was no fruit to be picked from two or three trees of inquiry, it was given up as a hopeless task, but apparently the Review's informant obtained his information through a reliable source, as the following from the Lindsay Post will show;—

The Post received the following message this morning, which is correct in every detail.

The famous detective, who has achieved a world wide notoriety through his arrest of Dr. Crippen, arrived in town on Thursday from Toronto, in company with another member of the Scotland Yard force. They registered at the Simpson House as Louis Ambrose and George McGann. About six o'clock a Post reporter while admiring the Oklahoma car in front of the Simpson House, noticed a gentleman in the rear seat whose appearance resembled somewhat the photos of the detective appearing in the papers. Sure enough "Mr. Ambrose," as the gentleman called himself, was none other than Detective Dew. The Post man, in response to a query, admitted being a newspaper man, and the detective lost no time in leaving the car. His brother detective appeared on the scene a few minutes afterwards in company with several others, and the car was headed for Fenelon Falls.

Later in the evening it leaked out that several well known citizens had been quietly informed that "Mr. Ambrose" was the great detective. He has until August 31st to report in connection with the Crippen affair, and was, in the meantime, touring a portion of Ontario.

$26000 FOR A SILVER MINE IN GALWAY

Big Strike of Silver Ore on Property of Henry Hunter — Peterborough People Interested in Adjoining Property of Six Hundred Acres.

There is a saying that "there's still life in the old horse," and this this might be adapted to read, there's still or in the old mine," in connection with a sale for $26,000 it is reported of a silver mine in Galway, the property of Mr. Henry Hunter. The mine was a hopeful proposition some years ago, but operations were suspended, only spasmodically taken up at the mine since then. The other day, however, a rich strike of silver was made, with the result above mentioned.

There is an iron mine only a few yards from this one, and Mr. G. W. Hatton, with others, are interested in it. The property is six hundred acres in extent, and the owners of it are naturally aroused over the recent big find in the adjoining property.

Yesterday Mr. Hatton, accompanied by Mr. W. J. Kearns and Mr. J. H. Burnham, who went in a legal capacity, Mr. Hatton informed the Review, autoed seventy-two miles to visit the iron mine.

The populace of Galway and the surrounding country are much excited over the sale of the Hunter mine, and every farmer will be on the alert for ore on his own property.

THESE CANOEIST TOOK THE TRAIL THAT LED TO NOWHERE

These two paddlers were on a cold scent. They were from Rochester and wanted to go to the lakes in a canoe by the canal trip. They called at a George street place of business inquiring where they might rent a canoe and were referred to a place where they might get one. The man from whom the canoe was rented gave them instructions as to how to reach the lift lock, and they started out. Imagine the surprise of the man they approached first in their inquiries for a canoe when he saw them at six o'clock yesterday evening scraping it up the Otonabee in front of the Quaker Oats mills. being unfamiliar with local conditions, it is presumed they unintentionally offered an insult to Peterborough by mistaking that humble gangway, the Hunter street bridge, for the celebrated liftlock. The paddlers eventually abandoned the idea of making the trip last night.

PURCHASED PROPERTY AND WILL OPEN THREE STORES IN THE NEW BUILDING

A valuable piece of property was purchased this week by three prominent merchants of the city, namely, Messrs. R. Cand, J. T. Braund and J. M. Greene, and the preliminary operations are now under way for the erection of a building upon it.

The property is situated on Charlotte street, just on the west side of Parker's Dye Works, at the Charlotte street bridge. There is a frontage of fifty-four feet and twelve feet right of way besides. The lot also has a depth of about one hundred and eighty feet, running nearly half way back to King street.

It is the intention of the purchasers to erect a large and handsomely-fitted two-storey building here, or, perhaps, a three-storey. It will be divided into three stores. The J. M. Greene Music Co. will likely occupy a double store, and the other one will be for rent or for sale.

The property here is splendidly located for business, and the price was reasonable, about fifty dollars a foot being paid. It was bought from Mr. H. Rush.

Concrete floors and water-proof walls will be built over the creek, so that the water will in no way affect the value of this site.

The above-mentioned purchasers had been looking at the property next to the customs house as a suitable location, but came to the conclusion that it was not so satisfactory, either from a financial or public standpoint, as their purchase.

Mr. Shurter, the well-known local concrete contractor, will have charge of the concrete work. The erection of the building, which will be commenced as early as possible, will undoubtedly raise the value of the property along the street south of it.

Mr. R. C. Braund is also engaged rather extensively in the erection of a number of houses in the south end of the city, in the neighborhood of Jackson avenue.

THE WEEKLY PILGRIMAGE

The weekly pilgrimage of the ruralites of this part of the country to the market square of Peterborough took place this morning. By ten o'clock all had assembled, and the usual ceremonies commenced. Brother Ferguson began to repeat the prices of his commodities which were as follows;—"Potatoes, 30c a peck; fine potatoes, my sales have been large already; cucumbers, 12 to 15 cents, large, attractive and ripe. Apples now are 20c a peck, although some are five cents less. All I want for these rosy tomatoes is the small, wee sum of 10 cents."

Carrots and large white onions, three bunches of each, for ten cents.

Butter to tempt the palate was still 25 cents a pound, and 20 cents for freshly laid eggs continued to hold the ground.

Cabbages, beets and cauliflowers, as usual, were there in full force.

The cabbages were five and seven cents, the beets five cents a bunch, or three for ten. Cauliflowers called for fifteen cents, and a pair of juicy chickens were seventy-five cents.

The market, taken altogether, presented a very busy and animated scene to-day.

Apples seemed to be most in demand, and some of the farmers made large sales.

Hay was not in evidence at all, neither was the proverbial pig.

The farmers reported a general satisfactory condition of affairs prevailing in the country.

MARVELOUS INVENTION PHOTOGRAPHS PLANTS, SHOWING ACTUAL GROWTH

The latest discovery, says a Paris correspondent of the Kansas City Times, is a method of taking photographs at the almost incredible speed of two thousand pictures a second. The inventor is Louis Bull, a young American scientist, who is settled in Paris. By this discovery it is possible to look at many natural processes which before this could only be guessed at.

For instance, it is possible to watch plants growing, and see every movement of the most rapid insects. This science is called ultra-rapid cinematography. It is distinct from ultra-microscopic cinematography, another recent invention, by which it is possible to see the movements of microbes and other things invisible to the naked eye.

The new ultra-rapid cinematograph shows how a fly or bee or other flying insects uses its wings. What is to the ordinary person a mere confused buzzing of wings, becomes a clear and orderly process with this machine. One series of these pictures shows 19 pictures of an ordinary house fly. The movements represented here occured in the space of 1-105th of a second of time, and yet each one is seen more plainly than if an elephant were walking slowly before the observer.

Anyone can see from these pictures that the fly does not start flying by buzzing his wings, as most people suppose. He depresses his wings very much as an aviator depresses the planes of his flying machine before starting. Then the fly gives himself a "take off" with his legs and when he is fairly in the air his wings start buzzing.

Perhaps the most curious series of ultra-rapid cinematography pictures is that which shows the course of a rifle bullet through a soap bubble. The movements here depicted in 17 pictures occupied exactly 1-125th part of a second. You see the bullet approaching the bubble inward for some distance before it breaks it.

At last the bullet pushes through the skin, but the skin reforms behind the bullet and falls back into the original position before the bullet reaches the farther side of the bubble. When the bullet passes out of that side it leaves a hole and destroys the bubble. You see it fade away to a drop of soapy water.

It is interesting to know the details of the methods by which these photographs are taken. To photograph an insect in flight it is necessary to arrange things so that he will fly voluntarily across the photographic field. With this object the device is placed near a window, so that the insects which are nearly always attracted near the light, fly in that direction.

It is indeepensable to release the shutter at the precise moment when the creature traverses the photographic field. The system which succeeds well with ordinary flies consists in keeping the insect captive by holding one foot in an electro magnetic clamp connected with the circuit that controls the shutter. As soon as the insect starts to fly it puts the apparatus into operation.

SPORTING NEWS

LARGE RACE TRACK WILL IN ALL PROBABILITY BE BUILT IN PETERBOROUGH

There is every likelihood of Peterborough being incorporated on the Canadian racing circuit with Toronto, Fort Erie, Hamilton, Windsor and Ottawa, when the track at the capital is completed.

This is no idle speculation, but a project under serious consideration by Toronto horsemen, the Review learned last evening upon the best of authority.

Peterborough is looked upon favorably by the promoters of the scheme for two reasons. In the first place it is convenient to Toronto, and in the second place it is a good midway point between Toronto and Ottawa. And another thing that is to be taken seriously into considweation is the fact that the present track at the Driving Park is one of the fastest in Canada.

The amended Miller bill, which permits of race meets in Canada of only a week's duration, has made the horsemen realize that if they are to have a reasonably profitable racing season that it will be necessary to establish more tracks, hence the idea of including Peterborough in the circuit.

FISH AND GAME PROTECTION

A new departure, but one that should receive the approval of all sportsmen, marks the August isue of Rod and Gun in Canada, published by W. J. Taylor, Ltd., Woodstock, Ont. The greater portion of the reading pages is given up to the reproduction in full of the interim Report of the Ontario Fish and Game Commission. As a rule Government publications receive only scant attention and have but a limited circulation. In this instance, however, the Report, through its appearance in the Magazine will be brought prominently before the attention of sportsmen, not only throughout Canad, but also in the States, and the many suggestions and recommendations contained therein can scarcely fail to have some effect in a much wider field than the Province. The interest taken in Fish and Game protection is now general throughout North America and this document will be studied and quoted for a long time to come. The statement of existing conditions and the many recommendations for improvement will bear much consideration from sportsmen. Through their organizations they should let the Government know their views on these matters in order that legislation may be based upon at least some of them. The interesting experience gained in "Canoeing on Lake Superior" is concluded and the story told of Mr Vance's Pet Fox, while the capture of a big fish is related. For trapshooters the number is fascinating as it gves interesting accounts of many big meets and numerous smaller ones, showing the importance attached to this branch of sport throughout the Dominion.

LAWN BOWLING

Two rinks came up from Keene on Thursday and beat the local rinks by one shot. Keene appears to have qualified material for an international contest.

In view of the above, all members of our club, who are willing or anxious to participate in the game with the Britishers on the 23rd inst., are requested to attend regularly between now and that date, so that we may be able to give a good account of ourselves in the coming game.

Two rinks from Keene paid a visit to the local club last evening and had a very pleasant, as well as a victorious, game, being one up at the finish. The players and score were as follows:—

GIRL EMPLOYED AS STABLE BOY

Regina, Sask., Aug. 13.—Despairing of earning a living in the vocations to which women are limited, Georgie Scott disguised herself as a boy, and amid the rough characters who "follow the ponies," found employment at the local exhibition grounds as stable boy. She was getting along very well when she was missed, and when her action had been traced, the police were notified. A search of the stables disclosed the girl sleeping in boy's clothing in one of the stalls. She was arrested, along with several of the other employees.

WILLIS' FINE WIN

The Belleville Intelligencer has the following about the race so splendidly won by Willis, of the Y. M. C. A. here;

5-mile race—There were six entries for this event, namely, H. Vickers, F. Bryant, C. Wallace, J. O. Adams, Belleville; W. Willis, Peterborough, and J. Schuman, Trenton. At the start Willis took the lead and maintained it to the finish, although he was, on the last lap, closely pressed by Vickers, who made a desperate effort to win. Schuman was the third to cross the line. Time 30.49.

J. Corkery, of Peterborough, was a close second in the 100 yards open.

A grand success!

Such was the remark heard on every hand in reference to the picnic held yesterday afternoon in Holton's grove, West Belleville, under the auspices of St. Michael's church of this city.

It was estimated that between 3,000 and 4,000 persons were upon the field during the afternoon and evening.

Visitors were present from Peterborough, Trenton, Deseronto and other places.

LIGHTNING PRANK

Citizen, Ottawa.

Mrs. C. Sims, of Westboro, had great holes burned in the shoe on her right foot and her stocking cut into shreds, but the foot only slightly burned, by lightning which struck the house. Mr. and Mrs. Sims and their child were sitting at the door watching the storm on Wednesday night when the bolt struck and all three were rendered unconscious. The father and baby boy were not hurt and recovered in a moment, but Mrs. Sims' escape was miraculous. One half of the shoe is almost burned away, while the other half is untouched. The child's cot was also burned slightly and a hole knocked through the back of the house.

About 300 members of the American Order of Owls are in Rochester attending the national convention of the order.

Scotland Yard Can Hold It's Own in Comparison With New York

London, Aug. 1.—Scotland Yard is the greatest crime-detecting organization in existenc. Any person versed in detective work will admit as much. No country has a more effective bureau. The New York Central Office is not its equal—certainly not its superior, taken as a whole. Its men have many characteristics which seem unfitting—even absurd—from an American viewpoint; but the things they accomplish are great.

Conan Doyle's stories really prove this, for they were all based on Scotland Yard exploits recounted to him by Scotland yard men. The wonderful feats of deduction attributed to Sherlock Holmes, though undoubtedly made more remarkable by the author, were founded on real cases.

FIRST USED THUMB PRINTS.

Sir Edward Richard Henry is present commissioner of police in London, and receives £2,000 a year. He is the man who suggested thumb prints as a means of identifying criminals. This system has been adopted in most of the countries of the civilized world.

Sir Melville Leslie Macnaughton is at the head of the detective service, and receives £1,200 a year.

The police headquarters of the metropolitan district of London is at Scotland Yard, and from this fact the C.I.D., or Criminal Investigation Department, takes its name. Frank Froest, whose name has appeared fre[illegible] the Crippen case, is the superintendent of Scotland Yard.

In order to understand the work of these English police, it must be remembered that they have entirely different kinds of criminals to contend with there—or rather they have the same kinds in entirely different proportions.

FEWEER MURDERS.

They have far fewer murders than the police on this side. America, of all modern civilized countries, is the place in which murder is practised most ruthlessly and abundantly. There's a reason, of course. America has those hordes of foreigners pouring in at Ellis Island constantly, and those hordes include the refuse of European nations, and this refuse furnishes a large proportion of the crimes which so swell the homicide statistics. The fact that the New York police cope as well as they do with the tremendous influx of foreigners—each foreigner is an unknown quantity—is a fact greatly to their credit. The London police have a more settled population to deal with, and they are spared much of the homicide problem.

FEW "YEGGMEN" ABROAD.

They have few "yeggmen," safe-crackers, and bank robbers nowdays. America is the field for that sort of operations, because its population is diffuse, its stores and banks are less safely guarded, its habits are more careless, and its criminals nevertheless are of the cleverest. England is a compact country, well settled, well protected, a place where all the means of prevention have been developed to the highest degree.

In that word prevention is the key to much of the work of Scotland Yard. That wonderful police machine bends all its energies to prevent crime, so that it will not have to go to the effort of hunting down the criminal after the wrong has been committed.

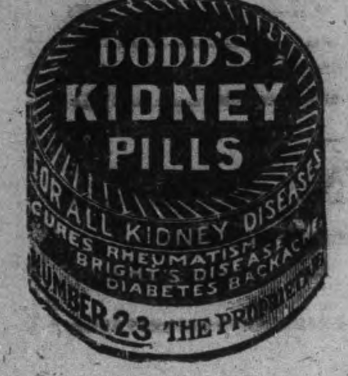
SECRET GALLERIES.

Many of the larger post offices in the United States—for instance, the branch one in the new Custom House on Bowling Green, New York City—have secret galleries in the masonry of the walls. From these galleries a person can obtain a view of the mail clerks at work without a possibility of being seen himself. Post office inspectors enter these galleries from time to time, unannounced, and watch the clerks. It is needless to say that in such post offices the number of letters stolen is not very large.

That is precisely the principle on which Scotland Yard operates to a large extent. It has a huge number of stool pigeons and informants. None of these are ever known as being in the employ of "The Yard," but they go their accustomed way, mingling with their own sort, be they murderers, thieves, anarchists, or what not, and from time to time they give the police hints of what is going to happen, and the police see to it that the plot is frustrated.

Meetings ar held in Hyde Park, and Socialists make violent speeches. There are always a few agents of Scotland Yard in the audience. They are not those tall, square-shouldered, square-toed fellows, such as a sophisticated New Yorker can pick out of almost any street crowd as "plain-clothes men." They look like all others. Perhaps one of them is that very hothead who is going to[illegible] suggesting that the King be hanged and that the Parliament buildings be burned to the ground. He is the fellow who, if a plot ever is formed to put his advice into effect, will inform Superintendent Froest secretly in time to have the ringleaders clapped into irons.

There are hundreds, indeed, probably thousands, of these informants, in the pay of the Crown, although their names never appear on any pay roll. The existence of this great staff of stool pigeons is one important difference between the London and New York police systems. It will be remembered that several of the New York commissioners have complained bitterly because they were compelled to do business entirely with detectives and never received any appropriation to establish "secret police." It would seem as though the very essence of successful "detecting" would be to have in the employ of the department men who would not be recognized as detectives. Yet practically nothing has ever been allowed to any public commissioner to pay stool pigeons and informants.



RESOLVED TO KEEP HOTEL

The Brantford Expositor says:—"Resolved to keep hotel and put the liquor business on a better basis, a number of representative hotelkeepers and wholesalers, all members of the local hotelkeepers' association, got together yesterday for a conference with Chief Slemin and License Inspector Eacrett. The nature of the conference was purely friendly, and the discussion took the turn as to the best way to keep undesirables away from hotel premises and to carry out the provisions of the law to the latter. President A. Howarth was chairman, and Messrs. A. A. Bixel and Fred Westbrook were among those present. Mr. Eacrett, representing the license department, stated that the most efficient way of preventing billed persons securing liquor was to notify the police department immediately one enters a hotel. This the hotelkeepers promised to do. In fact the undesirables who lounged and loafed around hotels will be told that their presence is not wanted.

As a result of the meeting, there are no $1.00 a day hotels left in Brantford, the Vendome, Grand Valley and others all raising their rates to $1.50 per day. The authorities were well pleased at the outcome of the meeting, and believe that they have the co-operation of the trade in carrying the law out. It is a noteworthy fact that sale during illegal hours has ceased in Brantford.

Woman's World

Little Princess Mary Her Father's Chum.

PRINCESS MARY.

England will now have three queens, the queen dowager, the new queen and Princess Mary. The latter is the only girl among the six children in the royal household and has long been a pet of the English nation. She celebrated her twelfth birthday on the 25th of last October and is said to be as pretty and lovable a little princess as ever lived outside a book of fairy tales.

Princess Mary was always a great favorite with King Edward, who kept her constantly in his company at Sandringham or Balmoral.

"Mary is as much a boy as the rest of them," her father said once. "She enters into the sports and recreations of her brothers with enthusiasm and can hold her own with them in most games."

Plays Cricket Like Boy.

She can play cricket and boasts of having once "clean bowled" Prince Arthur of Connaught with the first ball she pitched to him. She practically lives in the open air, fishing and boating continually throughout the summer.

Once last summer she and her brothers, Prince Edward and Prince Albert, were boating on the Thames when a skiff containing two Eton boys collided with their boat.

"Why didn't your mother teach you to steer before she let you come out on the river?" said one of the boys.

"Why didn't yours teach you manners?" replied the princess.

In common with her brothers she has been trained to be thrifty and to save the money allowed her. Each of the children receives a stated sum every week, never under any circumstances to be exceeded. In the case of Princess Mary, however, she need never ask for an exceptionally large allowance, for she has a savings account of no small proportions, accumulated by weekly visits to the post-office savings bank. She understands the system, does her own depositing and frequently verifies her account.

Plays Jokes Upon Brother.

While her brother, Prince Edward, now heir apparent, was at the naval college at Osborne she sent him a large, attractive looking parcel. As she had been delving into the mysteries of cooking and sending the prod[illegible] pected a feast and invited two friends to assist him in disposing of it. When the three of them opened the package, however, all they found was a wax faced doll dressed in the uniform of the Naval academy, bearing a tag in his sister's handwriting, "Isn't He Pretty?"

That the little princess is well educated may be gathered from the fact that her schooling began at the age of four years under a governess. At the age of eight Princess Mary was able to talk fluently with the French ambassador in his own language.

Lessons in the royal schoolroom begin at 7:30 a. m. in the summer and at 8 a. m. in the winter. There is an hour's instruction before breakfast, three hours before noon and two hours in the afternoon. Especial attention is paid to English history, in connection with which study frequent visits are made to the British museum for the inspection of original documents.

A Fashionable Cure.

If one could get well by going off to a fashionable sanitarium and making garden, why couldn't the same pursuit in one's own back yard prove as beneficial to the health and more so to the purse? Doubtless it would, but as with all remedies that cost little it is hard to convince some people of their value.

"Gardening as a curative pastime," says an exchange, "is the newest idea, introduced by the head of a fashionable sanitarium for nervous women, and each patient has her own particular plot to look after. She is even given the task of spading up the ground and is expected to spend a certain part of each day cultivating it regardless of the weather. On clear days, after the garden hour, the entire force of fair women is supposed to turn out and rake and burn leaves and fagots as another way of playing amateur farmers."

Baby's Irish Lace Cap.

Bonnets for tiny babies are made of baby Irish crochet and cut like Dutch caps.

They are mounted on an undercap of padded crepe de chine.

The Irish lace is threaded with tiny satin ribbons of blue or rose color, and a big cabbage-like rosette is fastened at each side where the cap strings run.

Within an hour Maynard Foster killed three strange mad dogs that wandered into Calvert, Md.

DECORATIVE HINT.

The Garden Hat Centerpiece Is the Latest.

If you are thinking of giving a luncheon party or a small porch tea and want something smart and new as a centerpiece, why not duplicate the garden hat effect seen in the illustration?

The large straw chapeau is caught up into a jaunty basket shape and tied about with gauze ribbon the shade of your color scheme. Poppies and grasses fill the hat in question.

Tea, chocolate or some kind of fruit punch is usually served at these porch parties, and often all three when the affair is a large one. When a small number of guests are being entertained it is easier to have the tea made in the kitchen and brought in with the tea things.

There are many varieties of sandwiches, but the secret of a delicious sandwich served recently was to be found in the cooking of the ham and in the abundance of the mayonnaise used in mixing. The ham had been boiled until it was brown and then ground very fine and mixed with mayonnaise. Sandwiches spread with quince jelly and sprinkled with minced nuts are very appetizing, and a filling of fig paste sprinkled with ground peanuts is also good.

The Summer Girl.

Checked gingham or linen makes up smartly in the frock illustrated. The double skirt is easily made, and nothing could be simpler than the all in one blouse. The frill about the round neck and down the front are dainty touches.

The Furniture's Summer Clothes.

If your parlor, living room or any of the most used rooms in the house are upholstered in heavy goods, be sure to make or have made summer slips, not only as a protection to the finer goods, but to give a lighter and more summery effect to the rooms.

There are many really pretty cretonnes and other materials which may be used and which will add to rather than detract from the beauty of the rooms. Time was when we thought only the plain linens should be used for this purpose, and the house looked as though it had gone into a sort of mummy-like slumber for the season. But this time is over. We may make the summer clothes of the furniture as bright and pretty as possible and still be in the vogue.

Of course the heavier rugs will be stored away, and if any rugs are used they will be of the cool fiber or "rag" materials, which are so pretty and light looking.

Then the draperies at the windows should be of the plain and cool materials, easily washable and not injured by the summer's dust.

If you have very valuable rugs or hangings it is well to place them in cold storage with some reliable firm during the season dangerous to their safety.

Household Helps.

One of the best things to remove grime from the bathtubs is a cloth moistened with paraffin. Then wash the tub with clear water.

Now that ants are "in season" the housewife should head them off by blowing cayenne pepper into the crevices by which they enter the house.

A good old writer says, "There is just one thing fixed and indispensable in bringing up a child—make him feel that he is loved."

To clean windows first wash well with a clean cloth, then polish with a newspaper which has been rubbed soft between the hands.

The United States preliminary estimate indicates a crop of 458,000,000 bushels of wheat.

THE FORMULA OF "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

Is On The Outside Of Every Box For All The World To See

Every user of "Fruit-a-tives" knows exactly what is being taken. The formula of this famous fruit medicine is printed plainly on the outside of every box. We have stated many times—and now state clearly—that "Fruit-a-tives" is made of the juices of apples, oranges, figs and prunes, with valuable heart and nerve tonics and antiseptics.

Everyone knows that fruit juice is healthful—but perhaps some do not understand why this is true.

Fruit juice consists of about 91% water, 8% of sweet principle, and 1% of a bitter substance. It is the quantity of bitter principle in fruit that gives the fruit value as a medicine. An eminent physician of Ottawa, after years of experimenting, found a method of increasing the bitter principle in fruit juice, thus increasing the medicinal or curative qualities.

The juices are first extracted from fresh, ripe oranges, apples, figs and prunes. By a secret process, some of the sweet atoms are replaced by the bitter principle. Then tonics and antiseptics are added, and the whole made into tablets, now known far and wide as "Fruit-a-tives."

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine in the world that is made of fruit juices, and is one of the few remedies that have let their composition be known from their introduction to the public.

"Fruit-a-tives" is nature's stimulant for the liver, bowels, kidneys and skin. In cases of obstinate Constipation, Liver Trouble, Indigestion, Backache, Rheumatism, Headaches and Impure Blood, this wonderful fruit medicine cures when everything else fails.

"Fruit-a-tives" is sold everywhere at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c., or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited. Ottawa.

INCREASE OF CRIME IN INDIA

A mass of interesting information is given in a blue book issued containing a "statement exhibiting the normal and material progress and condition of India" during the year 1908-9. In the Courts of Criminal Justice there was a marked improvement in the percentage of convictions in both classes and cases. The work in Sessions Courts increased to such an extent that three additional judges were appointed, two being appointed in the Tinnevelly division, where, owing to the riot and sedition cases, the work was unusually heavy. The High Court confirmed 53 out of the 80 sentences of death passed by Sessions Courts, and dismissed 85 per cent. of the total number of appeals sent up. There was a general increase in the work of Criminal Justice in Bengal during the year. The most noteworthy feature was the increase in the number of offences against the State. In 1908 there were 57 persons under trial for offences of this kind as against 13 in 1907. In Calcutta one person was prosecuted under the Newspapers (incitements to offences) Act VII of 1908, and was convicted, while there were 117 prosecutions under the Printing Press Act, of which 107 resulted in conviction.

In Eastern Bengal and Assam also the number of offences against the State was one of the noticeable features of the year. Twenty persons, against three in 1907, were proceeded against under Section 108 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for disseminating seditious matter. The failures for reported crime for the Punjab were the highest of any year except 1906, since the province was constituted within its present boundaries. [illegible] be held to account for most of the increase, but in certain favored tracts, such as the Chenab Colony, prosperity seemed to stimulate the litigious tendencies of the people. There was an improvement in the percentage of convictions. The capital sentence was confirmed by the Chief Court in 58 and commuted in 11 cases. The number of offences in the north-west frontier province during the year was the highest on record since the formation of the province. The main cause was undoubtedly the unsettled state of the border, but continued high prices also accounted for the increase in ordinary thefts.

In the central provinces there was a considerable increase in the total number of offences reported, mainly of offences under the Indian Penal Code. In four out of the five offences against the State the accused were editors of newspapers, of whom two apologized and two were acquitted, the others being convicted. The fifth political offence was the mutilation of the statue of Queen Victoria at Nagpur; the four accused persons were still under trial at the close of the year. The convict population on December 31, 1908, was 90,404. An increase in the number of prisoners admitted to jail in the course of the year occured in all provinces except Burmah, Eastern Bengal and Assam, and Coorg, and was most marked in the united provinces and Bengal. The daily average number of prisoners rose by about 8,000.

THESE LONG DAYS

Sixteen hours per day we keep our eyes working for us. They are good servants, worthy of our looking after their very best interests. Headaches, tired feelings, watery eyes, dull and confused vision, having to hold reading too far away, etc., are some of natures calls for eye helps. It pays us all to attend properly to these calls of our good eye servants. Those wishing eye examinations will find it to their advantage to 'phone write or call for appointment.

MOVING PICTURE BUSINESS IS FLOURISHING

The "moving picture craze" is not confined to the large cities. It is even more pronounced in the smaller cities, towns and villages, in which places, he is a lucky manager who can fill his orchestra seats and the balcony. The wise theatregoers cannot be lured nowadays into paying 25 or 50 cents for a gallery seat when the moving pictures invite him in at 10, says a writer in the 'Advance'.

A gentleman prominent in the manufacturing end of the business says that 5,000,000 people in the United States pay daily to see moving picture exhibitions.

The time is not distant when plays no longer popular in the high-priced theatres will be rented to the electric film men. That probably will be very rough on the stock companies, but the public will have the opportunity to see a play about which much has been written, and there will remain the small price of admission, which is the real secret of the whole success of these entertainments.

IMPORTANT PRONOUNCEMENT CONCERNING HYDRO POWER

W. K. McNaught Issues a Pamphlet Declaring That Ontario's Coal Supply Needs Supplementing by a Government Ownership and Conservation of Water Powers.

Toronto, Aug. 15.—An important pronouncement concerning the Hydro Electric Power policy of the Ontario Government was issued in the form of a pamphlet yesterday by W. K. McNaught, M.P.P. He replies to the charge that the ordinary citizen will profit little by the scheme and that only the southern part of the province will benefit in any way.

Mr. McNaught says in part:

It has often been asserted by the opponents of the Ontario Government's Hydro-Electric power policy that while it might perhaps be all right for the manufacturer, it would be of little or no value to the ordinary citizen.

Objection has been made, that while this power policy may be of benefit to those towns and cities lying contiguous to the Niagara Falls, it can only be local in its scope, and that therefore the other parts of the province should not be called upon to contribute towards it in any way whatever.

The first of these assertions has been so often disproved, that I need not do more than point out that, although the manufacturer may primarily be the greatest gainer by this enterprise, it will also beneficially affect in the following ways every citizen residing in any of the districts where cheap Hydro-Electric energy is supplied:

(1) They will be able to purchase electric light very much cheaper than they get it at present.

(2) The cost of lighting public buildings and streets will be very much reduced. The same thing will obtain in regard to the power used by the municipality for pumping water for fire protection, street cleaning purposes and household use. Power used for operating electric street railway systems, especially those operated under public ownership.

Every citizen who works in a factory, office or store will be a gainer in health by the substitution of electricity for lighting purposes, and in comfort by the elimination of the smoke nuisance.

As I have already said, these benefits are so self evident that they have only to be stated in order to convince any fair-minded person that they are absolutely true.

The other assertion, while plausible on its face, has only to be examined to show how unfounded it really is. The Hydro-Electric power policy of the Ontario Government is a much larger and far-reaching question than the general public have heretofore imagined, and I desire to take this opportunity of drawing attention to some phases of it which, so far, have not received the publicity and consideration to which they are entitled.

The Province of Ontario is unfortunate in respect of its fuel supply. Although it has an almost illimitable supply of pulpwood and other valuable timber, it is entirely without any coal of its own.

But bad as is the present condition of affairs in regard to the coal situation, it might be, and indeed it will surely be, very much worse, unless we become alive to the situation and conserve our natural fuel resources.

As I have already pointed out, although we have an almost inexhaustible supply of pulpwood and other valuable commercial timber, our supply of hard wood has been wasted to such an extent that it cannot be counted on in the older settled portions of the province except as a "dernier resort" during a period of fuel shortage, so that, after all is said, the citizens of Ontario are really dependent for their fuel upon a foreign country, and the supply of this vital necessity may be cut off at any time from any one of a number of causes such as a strike amongst the coal miners, or war between Great Britain and the United States (which God forbid), when the export of coal to Canada would at once be absolutely prohibited by the United States Government.

But, even granting that war between Canada and the United States is absolutely impossible, there is still another and a more real danger confronting us in regard to the coal question that we cannot argue away, and that is, that the time is not far distant when necessity will force the United States to prohibit the export of coal and other natural products which cannot be replaced.

This being the case, what remedy will the people of Ontario have? So far as I can see, their remedy can only lie in three directions.

First—The application of scientific methods to our great virgin forests, and the reforestration of cleared lands which are unsuited for agriculture.

Second—The exploitation of the immense beds of peat fuel to be found within the boundaries of the province.

Third—The nationalization and development of our water powers.

FATHER OF VETERINARY SCIENCE IN ONTARIO, DR. A. SMITH, SERIOUSLY ILL

One of Ontario's Most Honored Educationists, Who Has Been a Life-Long Lover of the Horse, is Suffering From Blood-Poisoning.

Toronto, Aug. 15.—Dr. Andrew Smith, F. R. C. V. S., known as the father of veterinary science in Ontario, and as a foremost lover of the horse, is seriously ill at his home, 311 Jarvis street, where he has been confined since about the 10th of June, suffering from a form of blood-poisoning. The fact that an eminent specialist from Johns Hopkins University has been summoned, indicates the gravity of his condition, and his many friends are anxious.

Born in Ayrshire, Scotland, about 77 years ago, Dr. Smith has been a resident of Toronto for almost half a century, and has identified himself closely with the life and growth of the city. He was one of the founders of the exhibition in 1878, and continued as an active director until 1909, when he was made an honorary life director. So greatly is he loved and esteemed by his colleagues, that on this occasion he was presented with a beautiful portrait in oils.

All life long his hobby has been the horse. He was one of the group of gentlemen who founded the Ontario Jockey Club, and there has been no more faithful attendant at the meets. Like the late William Hendrie, he has always stood for the highest type of sportsmanship, his sole purpose being the better development of the horse.

A life long Liberal, Dr. Smith has been on different occasions pressed to run for political office, but though his great personal popularity would have made him a strong candidate, he always declined the honor. He is a member of the National Club, and connected with many societies whose aim is to improve the breed of the horse. It has long been recognized that in knowledge of the subject which he has made a life study, he stands almost without a peer in Canada.

BRUSSELS GREAT EXPOSITION HEAP OF SMOULDERING RUINS

Brussels, Aug. 15.—The White City of the world's fair, as the Belgians have called their 1910 exposition, was last night a mass of flames and smouldering ruins. A spark, falling into inflammable material in the telegraph building, burst into flames, which, driven by a high wind, swept rapidly in all directions. Soon the Belgian, English and French sections were destroyed. Firemen and detachments of soldiers found themselves baffled by the gale, which carried the burned embers to all parts of the grounds.

To the left of the main building arose the picturesque roofs and spires of Bruexelles' Kermesse, a Belgian Coney Island, with water chutes, toboggan slides and scores of sideshows. This place was alive with Sunday crowds, and before they could be got out with any semblance of order, the Kermesse was afire. The crowds became panic-stricken, and men, women and children fought madly to escape. The exits became choked with the struggling masses, and men used their fists to clear the pathway. Many were trampled under foot and badly injured.

An engine corps from Antwerp attempted to dynamite the bridge of the French section, in the hope of checking the fire, but the flames leaped across and engulfed the Italian, Russian, Austrian, Japanese, Chinese and Norwegian buildings. Forty houses on the Avenue Solbosch, adjoining the exposition, were destroyed.

At the time of the outbreak not less than 100,000 persons were circulating in the grounds and the Kermesse. Troops were ordered out, and came at double quick time to aid the police in clearing the grounds. This was accomplished in fair order, except within the limits of the Kermesse. Considering the rapidity of the conflagration, the small loss of life is marvelous. So far as is known up to a late hour last night, only two are dead. The injured, as officially announced, number 30, but probably many hundreds received minor hurts.

As the flames reached the menagerie it was decided to shoot the beasts, but the heat drove back the soldiers, and the animals were left to their fate. The multitude of people were driven back to a safe distance and watched the destruction of the White City.

A late dispatch does not mention the fate of the Canadian section, but an earlier despatch states that it was then untouched. The famous Tudor panelling, belong to the Toronto Museum, was destroyed.

The fire was finally got under control. The Belgian and British sections are in ruins, while all the other sections, including the American, were partly destroyed.

Bands of thieves engaged in pillage and a soldier was stabbed while attempting to arrest three men, whom he found rifling a jewelry exhibit. The loss is estimated at $100,000,000. The diamond exhibit owners are heavy sufferers.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE THE FAMOUS NURSE DIES AGED 90

Woman Whose Name Has Been a By-word in Every British Home Passes Away as Result of a Relapse on Saturday—Funeral to be Quiet.

London, Aug. 15.—Florence Nightingale, the famous nurse of the Crimean war, and the only woman who ever received the Order of Merit, died Saturday afternoon at her London home.

Although she had been an invalid for a long time, rarely leaving her room, where she passed the time in a half-recumbent position, and was under the constant care of a physician, her death was somewhat unexpected. A week ago she was quite sick, but then improved, and on Friday was cheerful. During that night alarming symptoms developed and she gradually sank until two o'clock Saturday afternoon, when an attack of heart failure brought the end.

Her funeral will be as quiet as possible, in accordance with her wishes, made during recent years. Owing to her feebleness and advanced age Miss Nightingale has received but few visitors. On May 12, last she celebrated her 90th birthday, and was the recipient of a congratulatory message from King George.

The difficulty of procuring a suitable nurse during an illness in her family first drew Miss Nightingale's attention to the need for training educated women to replace the "Sairey Gamps" and "Betsy Prigs." She devoted herself to the study of the question, visiting hospitals at home and abroad. Later she took in hand the management of the Home for Sick Governesses in London, and was so engaged when the Crimean War broke out.

The sufferings of the soldiers in the autumn of 1854, after the battle of the Alma, sent a thrill of indignation through Britain. In the dilemma Sidney Herbert, the War Minister, bethought himself of his friend, Miss Nightingale, and wrote asking her to organize and take out a band of nurses to the relief of the soldiers, as he believed her to be the "one woman in England" who had the knowledge and training for the task. His letter crossed one from Florence Nightingale offering her services.

She set out Oct. 21, 1854, and reached the great Barrack Hospital at Scutari with her friends, Mr. and Mrs. Bracebridge, and a band of 38 nurses on Nov. 4. Within two days the huge barrack building, which lacked everything that a hospital should have, was filled to overflowing with the wounded from Inkerman. They came in by the shipload from the distant Crimea, with wounds undressed, limbs unset, and their only clothes stiff with gore.

Miss Nightingale spent a year and eight months at Scutari and in the Crimea, and not until peace was declared did she quit the scene of her heroic labors. She traveled back under an assumed name to avoid a public ovation, and went quietly to her family at Lea Hurst.

DROWNED OFF POINT PELEE

Leamington, Aug. 15.—Yesterday about noon, while Reginald Williams and Jerry Kitchen, both of Leamington, were bathing from a small boat in Lake Erie off Point Pelee, Kitchen either dropped into a hole or was caught by the undertow and drowned. Williams reached the shore in an exhausted condition and gave the alarm. The body has not yet been recovered. Kitchen was about twenty years of age and a machinist.

The undercurrent which flows around the east beach from Point Pelee renders that part of Lake Erie a very dangerous place to bathe. In the past few years there have been many narrows escapes from drowning at this point.

JEW CHARGED WITH BIGAMY

Port Hope, Aug. 15.—Charles Spiers, a merchant tailor of this town, was arrested here Saturday night on a charge of bigamy. The complainant was wife No. 1, from Brooklyn, N.Y., and she claims that Spiers left her over twenty years ago. Her brother, Mr. Jacobs, visited Port Hope some time ago, when he learned that Spiers had married again. Since that time they have been collecting the necessary evidence to bring the case to court.

Spiers has been a resident of Port Hope about eighteen years, and ten years ago married Miss Amelia Clarke of this town. He is a Jew, and carried on a small tailoring business. He had three children by his first wife, and the eldest son is here to give evidence against him. The case will be heard this afternoon. Spiers was allowed out on [illegible]

CAGE WITH SEVEN MEN FALLS 50 FT.

Cobalt, Aug. 15.—In one of those inexplicable accidents [illegible] often happen in mines, seven men were dropped in the cage in the main shaft of the Temiskaming mine at four o'clock Saturday afternoon, with the result that three are in the mine's hospital with serious injuries. The men in the hospital are: Coley Mackie, compound fracture of the arm; Philip Duash, injured back and badly shaken up; Nicholas Yantha, severe concussion of the legs.

That the affair was not more serious and no deaths resulted is most remarkable. The men boarded the cage at the third level, and gave the usual signal to "hoist men." In some way the cage with its seven passengers, broke loose and dropped into the fourth level, a matter of about fifty feet, before the automatic safety device was brought into play. The three men in the hospital are Finlanders, who were muckers. Unless they are injured internally, they will probably recover, although their condition is serious. One of the other four sustained a sprained ankle, but none of them were injured to such an extent that would necessitate bringing them to the hospital. This is the second time that this Temiskaming cage has dropped with human freight.

CANADIAN CREW ARE CHAMPIONS

Washington, Aug. 14.—Winners a week ago of the senior eight oar championship of Canada, the same eight, Ottawas from Ottawa city, Saturday won the championship of all North America. They took first honors in the prime event of the entire closing day of the thirty-eighth annual regatta of the National Association of Amateur oarsmen in a spectacular manner.

The race of the senior eights was an international event. Two Canadian crews, the Ottawas and the Argonauts of Toronto, were entered for the north and the Potomacs of Washington, the Vespers of Philadelphia, and the New York Athletics for the States. The American oarsmen were no match for their rivals from across the border. The real contest was between the Ottawas and the Argonauts, and as at St. Catharines last week, the former crew crossed the line less than a length ahead of the latter.

N. B. Jackes, the star of the Argonauts, won the intermediate singles for sculls in easy fashion. Up to the quarter he was three or four lengths ahead when both J. B. Kelley of the Vespers, and James a Keenan of the West Lynn (Mass.) Boat Club, moved up.

The new hospital at Oshawa was formally opened Saturday.

Lloyd's News say that the voice of the Canadian west and Laurier's endorsement of the farmers' grievances has produced among tariff reformers here something like the paralysis which follows a great disaster in war time.

Wm. J. Campbell, a contractor, and Henry Twigby, were injured by the collapse of an old frame house they were moving in Toronto. The house was made notorious in 1898 when an insane woman murdered her three children.

DIED WHILE CUTTING HAY

Onion Lake, Sask., Aug. 15.—Yesterday morning the body of Samuel Baptiste Dumont was found in a hay field a few miles from here. Deceased had been cutting hay, and a passerby, seeing the team standing alone, went over and found the body near the machine, the team having stood there all night.

Dumont was a grandfather of the notorious Gabriel Dumont, one of the leaders in the northwest rebellion, and leaves a family of several grown-up children.

DESPONDENT SHOT HERSELF

Buffalo, Aug. 15.—Mrs. Blanche Jenkinson, 22 years old, wife of Merrill Jenkinson of Cayuga, Ont., shot herself dead in her apartments on East Chippewa street Saturday night. She had been separated from her husband about a year.

Mrs. Jenkinson left the following note addressed to a room-mate:

"Dear Helen: Don't be surprised at what I have done. I am despondent and up against it. I telephoned Merrill yesterday, and he said he would have nothing to do with me. He is the only person I ever really cared for in this world. Try to be good and don't do what I have done. To be good is all that counts. Please don't laugh at my writing."

PRESENTATION TO MR. GRAHAM

Calgary, Aug. 15.—While the Premier rested Saturday night and yesterday morning the citizens did honor to his colleagues. At the Northwest Mounted Police barracks old residents of Leeds, Grenville and Dundas surprised Mr. Graham with an illuminated address and the presentation of a gold-headed cane. Ald. M. Halliday read the address, while Dr. Anson Donaldson made the presentation.

Mr. Graham congratulated Calgary on the citizens she was securing from the east.

The stands accommodated 1,500 people, and were of frame construction. A loss of $4,000 is covered by insurance, held by the Street Railway Co. There was no means of combating the fire and a number of firemen were only able to watch the stands burn.

Fell Off the Wharf.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Aug. 15.—While fishing from the Maid of the Mist dock early Saturday night, Albert, the 11-year-old son of Albert Schisler, lost his balance, fell and was drowned. There is a strong current at this point, and all efforts to save him were fruitless. The body has not been recovered.

Vancouver, Aug. 15.—Fred White, comptroller of the Mounted Police, is here on his way to Dawson, where he may arrange to reduce the Mounted Police force in the Yukon. In Klondike boom days the force numbered several hundred, but the spread of civilization has caused reductions, until the force now numbers not more than fifty.

Attorneys had established 'Adams' claim to the fortune to the satisfaction of the Indiana prison authorities, and Adams promised that he would return to this state to report.

A Well-Known Criminal.

Montreal, Aug. 15.—Supt. McNamara of the Canadian Pinkerton agencies, said last night that Gerald M. Crowe, recently arrested at Calgary for theft and forgery, was a well-known criminal who had been followed by the Pinkerton men from New York to Chicago and Calgary, and it was now expected evidence had been secured for a long term of imprisonment.

DOCTORS BALKED ON THE JOB

Brantford, Aug. 15.—Local doctors, appointed to conduct vaccination in Eagle Place, where the outbreak of smallpox has been confined, have balked on the jab, owing to the treatment they have received while in their house to house visit. Unless the city changes the order and requires each person to appear at stated hours at an office set aside for vaccination purposes, the doctors will not continue their work. Two new cases have been reported, both of whom refused a week ago to be vaccinated.

MONDAY, AUG. 15, 1910.

WHY IS IT?

The church was luxurious. The organ harmonious, the soloist of splendid voice. The preacher was earnest. But where were the young men? There were women, young and old, none were poorly dressed, some were attired according to fashion's latest edict. There were aged men, middle-aged men, and men soon to be classed in the middle age. But where were the young men? They were not there. Ah, Christ! is this the church you meant? Is this the religion you exemplified? A set ceremony, a collection, a few hymns, a sermon, the benediction, the parade home.

It cannot be. A society, a social circle, entertainments, an annual report, so much for the heathen, so much for home missions, so much for the pastor, so much for the choir fund, so much for the sexton, so many names added to the church, so many names dropped. How of the strikes? How of the social problems, the very poor, the very poor of soul, the hungry of soul, the very poor of body, the hungry of body? Ah, church universal, you are but playing at it. That majestic figure, the Christ who hundreds of years ago walked the earth, would, we fear, in His visit to the church to-day, be, as of old, first unrecognized, then ostracised by those who claim to honor Him best. But in the park nearby were a score of young men on this Sunday morning of yesterday.

OUR CIVILIZATION

Six hundred and thirty members of the Queen's Own Regiment, under Sir Henry Pellatt, are now en route to England. And as the farmer's son will read in the papers of the great welcome they will receive all along the line, he will become a bit dissatisfied. The sound of the binder, the lowing ing of the cattle, the bleat of the sheep, the grunt of the fat hog, will be a harsh note in the everlasting grind. Be content and stay where you are, young fellow. We need you. We [illegible] get along far easier without the soldier than without the farmer. We [illegible] nation of peaceful pursuits. We are to be the granery of the world. War is a science how best to kill the other fellow with the least possible risk of being killed oneself. Farming is a science vastly more superior. The farmer is in league with the Infinite, the sun and the seasons. What is war in league with? The devil and hell. War should be a relic of the dark age. It has no rightful place among civilized man. Yet, can a world be called civilized where hundreds of thousands are starving, and millions are spent for battleships, and fitting out men to kill men, just like themselves.

LARGE FAMILIES

The Montreal Witness has a lengthy editorial on the decline of the race. The Witness is a good old-fashioned paper and has good old-fashioned ideas about large families. And what's the matter anyway? Where are the fine big families of the used to be? Where are the six, eight, ten or a dozen children, the noisy tousy bunch of possibilities. They are not. Mother is too busy with her social duties to raise a family, and father says he can't afford one. So they refuse and hope for success by defying the law of God Almighty. Then she wonders when the doctor says an operation is necessary and he wonders why the home is so large, so still, so lonely. Nothing is more pitiful than the aged couple childless. They said when we have this, when we have that, we will rear a family. They possessed this, they possessed that, and then God Almighty denied them their wish.

THE TELEPHONE GIRL

Don't get mad at the telephone girl, because she whispers back that one word "busy."

You wouldn't blame the clerk if you walked into one of the Matthews stores and wern't immediately served if all the clerks were busy.

Neither would you be sore on the dry goods clerk, the boot and shoe man or the barber.

Why should you say, "O damn that girl, she's slow, isn't she."

Blame the man, the gossiping woman that's holding the line and not the operator.

VENTURE WAS THE LAST CHANCE

A man who goes out and gets drunk usually feels so sick that he wants to crawl into some hole and pull the hole in after him. But the fellow who gambles is different. He has a terrible disease. The drunk feels so sick that the smell of booze is enough to make him vomit. The gambler, or the fellow who plays stocks on the races is never satisfied. Does he clean up $1,000? Then give me $1,000 more. Does he make the $1,000? The cry is $2,000. The man who makes fair money honestly, who can carefully enjoy life is the one to be envied.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., Aug. 14.—Chas. E. Stolze, of Buffalo, committed suicide yesterday afternoon by wading into the river about Prospect Point and going over the American Falls in view of hundreds of tourists. In the pocket of his coat, which he threw aside, was a certificate in a mining venture called "The Last Chance."

Its the old story of the easy road to riches, which always is harder and less pleasant than the fair day's pay for the fair day's work. There is better digestion, better friendships and better sleep, than enjoyed by the man who is always trying to beat his friend or get rich quick.

QUALIFIED

There is no need for anyone to clamor. If a person can deliver the goods that person, irrespective of creed, or sex, will be given a chance to do it. Most complainers, those who say the world's unfairly treating them, are those who have been helped time and time again. They have been propped up, held up, stayed and buoyed in vain. They do nothing but fail in the battle of life.

> "Dream after dream ensues > and still they dream that they > shall still succeed and still are > disappointed."

So they forget that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, give up the struggle and join the ranks of the grumblers.

There is no need of grumbling. If we would only spend the time in working to our goal, that we do in growling, our little world would be a happier one.

Yes, positions are ever open for the one that can deliver the goods. James McNeice was an expert science master in Welland's High school. He was given an excellent opportunity to go to Renfrew, but refused. Now he is going to Guelph Collegiate Institute [illegible] blank in Welland and Miss Frances Ashall, of Toronto, is the one who will fill it. But she is a woman! Well, what odds, she is a qualified woman. Qualify and one need never be idle. The idlers and complainers most of the time, don't want to work, or could not fill an expert's position if they had a chance.

Miss Ashall will receive $1,200 salary.

THE FLY

"The disease-carrying house-fly" is given a severe arraignment in the current Magazine for the Blind, by Daniel D. Jackson, the eminent bacteriologist of New York. This authority states that there is no longer any question but that the fly's chief accomplishment is the spread of typhoid, cholera and other intestinal diseases. English medical writers go still farther, and convict the "innocent fly" of carrying tuberculosis, diphtheria and other infections.

The "musca domestica" was not condemned without proof. Captured then allowed at large. When recaptured they were found loaded down with bacteria—one of them showing under the microscope an accumulation of 100,000 foecal bacteria on its mouth and legs. Another experiment was conducted in a model tenement, in New York. The plumbing was new, the sanitation was good, milk was sterilized and water boiled before drinking. Only one gateway was left unguarded from disease—flies were allowed in and out. From nearby stables these creatures were found to bring in the typhoid germs, and over a hundred cases occured. The dangers of the spread of contagion are vastly increased by their enormous productivity. A fly lays about 420 eggs at a time, and by the end of the season the progeny may mount up to 1,000,000,000,000,000,000,000.

The Boards of Health are beginning to wage determined war on this pest. Among their simple recommendations are: Cover all refuse; have a complete garbage system; leave no food exposed; keep flies from sick chambers, particularly the infectious cases. THIS IS DEDICATED TO THE BOARD OF HEALTH.

BRIEF AND TO THE POINT

You can't beat the Lord's Prayer for comprehensiveness. Yet every Sunday the long suffering public in weather hot or cold in season and out are, if they go to church, forced to listen to long drawn out prayers that girdle the earth in length, that ask for everything from blessings on the heathen of China to the missionary in the far far west. Why scatter the effort and waste the energy—especially during this hot weather. Brief and to the point in sermon and prayer would make a distinct and unique hit here, there and everywhere.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGAIE

The death of that angel of mercy, Florence Nightingale, occurred yesterday. The age, over 90 years, shows that the good do not all die young. Before the days of antiseptic wrappings and modern surgery, she lived, before the well drilled Red Cross Corps, she aided. A few years ago she received the freedom of London. So long as our language and our nation lives, will the name of Florence Nightingale be remembered. How many warriors, how many millionaires, will be living green in the memory as long as her's? Very few. The nurse of the crime is well nigh immortal.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER ETC.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier is a clever man he can play with words as easy as a cat can play with a mouse. Not content with the theft of the Conservative clothes line, when the stalwarts of the party were snoozing in their secure opinions and fine majority, he put on these clothes and walked out into the limelight. He has been there ever since. All things to all men, happy, genial and jovial Sir Wilfrid is a fitting man to head a circus such as Newton McConnell, the clever cartoonist, depicts daily in the News in its march through the west.

"'The people like to be humbugged," said Phineas Barnum, of Barnum and Bailey fame. "You can fool all of the people some of the time, and some of the people all of the time, but you can't fool all of the people all of the time." That's what Barnum also said when the white elephant was exposed. Now there is that other elephant, McConnell calls it G.T.P. expenditure, and other things that would make interesting reading were the facts known.

THE DUEL OF TO-DAY

Vienna, Aug. 13.—A humorous story of a duel which was fought in theory at Arad, in Hungary, is told by the newspapers here. Two visitors to a cafe came into conflict and the next day the local newspaper published the following notice;—"Sir, a gentleman cannot get his seconds to a person of your description. Kindly consider, therefore, that your face is slapped. I therefore, give you a slap on the face right and left. You can thank your stars that I did not use my stick."

To this the following reply appeared the next day;—"To my excellent adversary—I beg to thank you that you gave me only two slaps in the face (and these only in writing), and that you did not take stronger measures [illegible] in answer to your in[illegible] your head. At the moment that you read these lines regard yourself a corpse. My best respects to your dead body."

Thus the world marches on. In ancient days mailed knights in duel tilted at each other on horseback with extended lances. There was ever a fair princess to be rescued or a lady in the case. Or, perhaps, in the arena with shield and sword in hand they fought, two gladiators. 'Twas death then. Yes, duels were for blood in those days. They were honorable and they were affairs of honor.

Then came modern times.

And as man grew less fierce, the amount of blood shed to wipe away the insult, grew less also.

No longer is a mortal wound, a shot in the breast, a lunge near the heart, necessary to satisfy honor—a drop or two of blood, a scratch suffices.

The brave man to-day is the real gentleman, no coward, but one who can receive the insult and wait, the philosopher who knows that reputation and character are two extremely different things. The brave man today is the man who refuses to be annoyed by the unworthy, a man who has a purpose in life, and who presses forward to accomplish it. He will be criticized, of course he will; he will be called a fool, certainly—a fool and a crank. Will he stop? He may for the moment, but he will immediately go on, and the scoffing world will one day acknowledge him.

Did you ever notice that tobacco is clean? If a man drops a piece of meat no matter how clean the floor may be, he will either give it a kick or pick it up and lay it to one side. He will never eat it. But let him drop his plug of tobacco on the ground and no difference how dirty the spot where it fell, he will pick it up and give it a careless swipe on his coat sleeve or on the bosom of his pants and then take a chew with greater relish than ever.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

But for one thing the hour would have been perfect. Kitty, ordinarily brave and cheerful, was very lonesome and homesick. The dismal failure of it all! She had danced, sung, spoken her lines the very best she knew how, and none had noticed or encouraged her. It was a bitter cup after all the success at home. If only she could take it philosophically like La Signorina!

And there were so many things she could not understand. Why should La Signorina always go veiled? Where did she disappear so mysteriously in the daytime? And those sapphires and diamonds and emeralds? Why live here with such a fortune hanging round her neck?

"Kitty?" The voice came from the doorway. Kitty was startled for a moment, but it was only La Signorina. Kitty furtively wiped her eyes.

"I am over here by the window. The moon was so bright I did not light the lamp."

La Signorina moved with light step to the window, bent and caught Kitty's face between her hands and turned it firmly toward the moon.

"You have been crying, cara!"

"I am very lonely," said Kitty.

"You poor little homeless bird!" La Signorina seized Kitty impulsively in her arms. "If I were not"— She hesitated.

"If you were not?"

"If I were not poor, but rich instead, I'd take you to one of the fashionable hotels. You are out of place here in this rambling old ruin."

"Not half so much as you are," Kitty replied.

"I am never out of place. I can live comfortably in the fields with the peasants, in cities in extravagant hotels. My mind is always at one height. Where the body is does not matter much."

There was a subtle hauteur in the voice. It subdued Kitty's inquisitive- [illegible]

"Sometimes," said Kitty, drying the final tear—"sometimes I am afraid of you."

"And wisely. I am often afraid of myself. I always do the first thing that enters my head, and generally it is the wrong thing. Never mind. The old woman here will trust us for some weeks yet." She leaned from the window and called, "Pomp-e-o!"

From the canal the gondolier answered.

"Now then!" said the woman to the girl.

Kitty threw a heavy shawl over her head and shoulders, while the other wound about her face the now familiar dark gray veil, and the two went down into the Campo to the landing.

Pompeo threw away his cigarette and doffed his hat. He offered his elbow to steady the women as they boarded, and once they were seated a good stroke sent the gondola up the canal. Under bridges they passed. They glided by little restaurants where Venetians in olden days talked liberty for themselves and death to the Austrians, and at length they came out upon the Grand canal where the Rialto curves its ancient blocks of marble.

"There! This is better."

"It is always better when you are with me," said Kitty.

For years Kitty had fought her battles alone, independent and resourceful, and yet here she was leaning upon the strong will of this remarkable woman, and gratefully too.

"Now, my dear Kitty, we'll just enjoy ourselves tonight, and on our return I shall lay a plan before you, and tomorrow you may submit it to the men."

"I accept it at once without knowing what it is."

"What a beautiful palace!" Kitty cried presently, pointing to a house not far from the house of Petrarch. The moon poured broadly upon it. The gondola posts stood like sleeping sentinels, and the tide murmured over the steps.

Pompeo, seeing Kitty's gesture, swung the gondola diagonally across the canal.

"No, no, Pompeo!" La Signorina spoke in Italian. "I have told you never to go near that house without express orders. Straight ahead."

"Who lives there?" asked Kitty.

"Nobody," answered La Signorina, "though once it was the palace of a great warrior. How picturesque the gondolas look, with their dancing double lights!"

"The old palace interests me more than the gondolas," declared Kitty. But La Signorina was not to be trapped.

From the Grand canal they came out into the great canal of San Marco, the beginning of the lagoon.

"La Signorina"— began Kitty.

"There! I have warned you twice. The third time I shall be angry."

"Hilda, then. But I am afraid whenever I call you that. You do not belong to my world."

[illegible] makes you think that?"

There was a smile behind the veil.

"I do not know unless it is that you are at home everywhere, in the Campo, in the hotels, in the theater or the palace. Now, I am at home only in the theater, in places which are unreal and artificial. You are a great actress, a great singer, and yet, as O'Mally would say, you don't belong." Kitty had forgotten what she had started out to say.

La Signorina laughed. "Pouf! You have been reading too many novels. To the molo, Pompeo."

At the molo, the great quay of Venice, they disembarked. The whilom prima donna dropped 50 centesimi into Pompeo's palm, and he bowed to the very gunwale of the boat.

"Grazie, nobilita."

"What does he say?" asked Kitty.

"He says 'Thanks, nobility.' If I had given him a penny it would have been thanks only. For a lira he would have added principessa—princess. The gondolier will give you any title you desire if you are willing enough to pay for it."

The Piazza San Marco, or St. Mark, is the mecca of those in search of beauty. Here they may lay the sacred carpet, kneel and worship. There is none other to compare with this mighty square, with its enchanting splendor, its haunting romance, its brilliant if pathetic history.

There were several thousand people in the square tonight, mostly travelers. The band was playing selections from Audran's whimsical "La Mascotte." The tables of the many cafes were filled, and hundreds walked to and fro under the bright arcades or stopped to gaze into the shop windows.

The two women saw no vacant tables at Florian's, but presently they espied the other derelicts—O'Mally, Smith and Worth—who managed to find two extra chairs.

Through her veil their former prima donna studied them carefully, with a purpose in mind. The only one she doubted was Worth. Somehow he annoyed her. She could not explain, yet still the sense of annoyance was always there.

"Gentlemen," she said during a lull, "I have a plan to propose to you all."

"If it will get us back to old Broadway let us have it at once," said O'Mally.

"Well, then, I propose to wait no longer for letters from home. My plan is simple. They say that a gambler always wins the first time he plays. I propose that each of you will spare me what money you can, and Kitty and I will go to Monte Carlo and take one plunge at the tables."

A glorious green emerald lay in the palm of her hand.

"Monte Carlo!" O'Mally brought down his fist resoundingly. "That's a good idea. If you should break the bank think of the advertisement when you go back to New York."

"Be still," said Worth.

"Dash it, business is business, and without publicity there isn't any business." O'Mally was hurt.

"Mr. O'Mally is right," said La Signorina. "It would be a good advertisement. But your combined opinion is what I want."

The three men looked at one another thoughtfully, then drew out their wallets, thin and worn. They made up a purse of exactly $150, not at all a propitious sum. But, such as it was, O'Mally passed it across the table. This utter confidence [illegible] La Signorina's heart. She turned aside for a moment and fumbled with the hidden chain about her neck. She placed her hand on the table and opened it. O'Mally gasped. An emerald—a glorious green emerald—lay in the palm of her hand.

"I shall give this to you, Mr. O'Mally," said the owner, "till I return. It is very dear to me, but that must not stand in the way."

"Ye gods!" cried O'Mally in dismay. "Put it away. I shouldn't sleep o' nights with that on my person. Keep it. We'll trust you anywhere this side of jail. But you're a brick, all the same." And that was as near familiarity as O'Mally ever came.

She turned to Smith, but he put out a hand in violent protest; then to Worth, but he smiled and shook his head.

She put the ring away. It was her mother's. She never would smile scornfully in secret at these men again.

"Thank you," she said quietly. "If I lose your money we will all go to Florence. I have another plan, but that will keep till this one under hand proves a failure."

O'Mally beckoned to a waiter.

"Tom!" warned Smith.

"You let me alone," replied O'Mally. "A quart of Asti won't hurt anybody."

Early the next morning she and Kitty departed for Monte Carlo in quest of fortune. Fortune was there, waiting, but in a guise wholly unexpected.

CHAPTER XI.

A BOX OF CIGARS.

On the way up to Rome Hillard and his pupil had a second class compartment all to themselves. The train was a fast one, for the day of slow travel has passed in Italy, and the cry of speed is heard over the land.

There was a change of cars at Rome and a wait of two hours.

After luncheon Merrihew secretly bought two boxes of cigars to carry along. They were good cigars and cost him $15. He covered them with some newspapers and at the station succeeded by some legerdemain in slipping them into one of his cases. Hillard would have lectured him on his extravagance, and this was a good way to avoid it. But some hours later he was going to be very sorry that he had not made a confidant of his guide.

As they were boarding the train they noticed two gentlemen getting into the forward compartment of the carriage.

"Humph! Our friend with the scar," said Hillard. "We do not seem able to shake him."

"I'd like to shake him. He goes against the grain somehow." Merrihew swung into the compartment. "I wonder why the Sandfords dropped him?"

"For some good reason. They are a liberal pair, and if our friend forward offended them it must have been something outside the pale of forgiveness. But I should like to know where old Giovanni is. I miss him."

"Poor devil!" said Merrihew, with careless sympathy.

The train started.

"Monte Carlo! Gold, gold, little round pieces of gold!" Merrihew rubbed his hands like a miser.

"Hard to get and heavy to hold!" quoted Hillard. "I suppose that you have a system already worked out."

"Of course. I shall win if I stick to it."

"Or if the money lasts. Bury your system, my boy. It will do you no good. Trust to luck only. Monte Carlo is the graveyard of systems."

"But maybe my system is the one. You can't tell till I have tried it."

Soon the train began to lift into the mountains, the beautiful Apennines. By the time they arrived in Genoa, late at night, both compared favorably with the coalers in the harbor of Naples.

Early the next morning the adventurers set out for Monte Carlo—more tunnels; a compartment filled with women and children. But the beauty of the Riviera was compensation.

Ventimiglia, or Vintimille, has a sinister sound in the ears of the traveler if perchance he be a man fond of his tobacco. The train drew in. A dozen steps more and one was virtually in France. But there is generally a slight hitch before one takes the aforesaid steps—the French customs. A porter popped his head into the window.

"Eight minutes for examination of luggage!" he cried.

"Come, Dan," cried Hillard; "lively if we want good seats when we come out. We change trains."

After a short skirmish they located their belongings. They would have to be patient.

Among the inspectors at Ventimiglia is a small, wizened Frenchman with a face as cold and impassive as the sand blown sphinx. He possesses, among other accomplishments, a nose peculiar less for its shape than for its smell. He can "smell out" tobacco as a witch doctor in Zululand smells out a "devil." Fate directed this individual toward the Americans. Hillard knew him of old, and he never forgets a face, this wizened little man.

"Monsieur has nothing to declare?" he asked.

Hillard made a negative sign and opened his cases. With scarce a glance at their contents and waving aside the coupons the inspector applied the chalk and turned to Merrihew.

"Monsieur has nothing to declare?" he repeated.

Merrihew shook his head airily. "Niente, niente!" he said in his best Italian. He did not understand what the inspector said. He merely had suspicions.

"Look!" suddenly exclaimed Hillard.

Passing out of the door, which led to liberty and to France, their luggage guaranteed by cabalistic chalk marks, were two women. One of them was veiled; the other was not.

"Kitty Killigrew, as I live!" shouted Merrihew, making a dash for the door.

But the inspector blocked the way, beckoned to a gendarme, who came over, and calmly pointed to Merrihew's unopened cases.

"Open!" said the inspector.

"But"— Merrihew struggled to pass.

"For heaven's sake," cried Hillard, "be patient and open the cases at once."

Merrihew handled his keys clumsily. It is ever thus when one is in a hurry. Finally he threw back the lids, feeling that in another moment he must have spouted Italian or French out of pure magic simply to tell this fool inspector what he thought of him.

To be continued.

A DOLLAR A DITCH

"There goes another dollar."

This is what a George street merchant kept repeating to a mystified friend as they were driving over the billowy sections of George street, between Smith and McDonnel streets.

In response to a question as to what he meant by this oft uttered remark the merchant said, that the depressions in the road were where the sewer connections had been made with the residences. He said two connections had been made with properties of his on George street last summer and a dollar extra was collected towards the building up of each of the road level. Many of these connections have been two and three years ago.

So the question is not "where did the money come from," but, "where did the money go?"

THESE BASS AVERAGED AT A HIGH MARK

Miss Carey and Miss McDonald, the local public school teachers are adepts with the rod in more than one sense. On Saturday at Stony Lake they each caught seven bass, which averaged around the four-pound mark.

AUBURN POWER CAPITALIZED AT $500,000

The Ontario Gazette contains notice of the granting of letters patent to the Auburn Power Co. for an increase of capital from $99,000 to $500,000, and for an increase of the directorate from three to five.

It is understood that the increase of capital is made in connection with the disposal of the Auburn dam to the recent purchasers.

Messrs. Jas. Kendrey and J. H. Larmonth, who are interested in the matter, could not be seen by the Review to-day, as both are out of town.

Mr. J. H. Burnham, of Ruddy & Burnham, the solicitor for the Auburn Woolen Company and Auburn Power Company, who has handled the recent transfer, was seen respecting it, but declined to give any information other than that contained in the public press, as the property had been disposed of, and it was for the purchasers to give out anything they might see fit.

He said that the transfer had been a very large and satisfactory one, and that in the near future the purchasers would probably develop to fine advantage.

SHALL CITY HAVE MUNICIPAL POWER?

Two Propositions That May Come Before the City and Both of Which are Available.

Those who deplore the fact that the available power at the waterworks dam has passed out of city control, and who also regret that the opportunity to acquire the Auburn power dam, has been placed out of reach, may just as well recollect that there are yet two strings to the bow, both of which, or either of which are within reach, if the city really wishes to equip itself with a power weapon to encourage the location here of manufactories.

Within a short time the Lakefield power dam and privilege will be in the market. The lease under which it is now operated will expire and while power will be required at Lakefield, the larger part of the possible output will be available for use elsewhere.

The owners of the power site are not unwilling to part with it. They have no prospective use for the greater part of the power, and the operations of the company do not contemplate such extension in the future as would bring it into use.

The city should give the matter careful consideration at once. The head is a substantial one. The rebuilding of the dam would probably be done by the Government as the point is one affected by navigation. The transmission line is only about ten miles to the city limits, and the whole opportunity seems, at a first glance to be feasible. It is understood that a price has been put on the site, tentatively, but that is only a matter of general proposition.

On the other hand the city might well consider, relatively the value of the Lakefield opportunity as compared with that of Burleigh Falls. Roughly speaking, the two stand even. At the last conference with the owners of the Burleigh Falls site they asked, and were willing to take $125,000. Then there is the equipment and transmission service. The same things would apply to Lakefield, but there is no question that the head, flow of water, volume of supply and capacity of reserve would be greater at Burleigh than at Lakefield. Lakefield gets what water comes down from Young's Point. Burleigh gets the reserve of Lovesick Lake, Deer Bay and up to Buckhorn. These propositions should be taken up and looked into, with a view of putting the city in shape to corral industries.

FIFTY THOUSAND PEOPLE STARVING

Special to the Review.

Tokio, Aug. 15.—Eleven hundred persons are reported dead, more than 50,000 homeless and starving as the result of the floods. Though the situation to-day appeared somewhat better at times, the waters fluctuated, and reports from the upper parts of the Sumida River indicated the crisis was not yet past for Tokio. The situation in the outlaying regions is desperate, according to the reports furnished by the military expeditions sent out to succor the victims. [illegible] sweeping the city as it is now certain it will be days before some of the submerged sections can be cleaned and disinfected.

EIGHTEEN YEARS ONLY DRINKING FROM KEG ON SUNDAY AFTERNOON

There were but two cases at the police court this morning.

A young man was charged with trespassing on the premises of the Peterborough Lumber Company. The accused, in company with three others, had a keg of beer with them on Sunday afternoon, and were enjoying the contents when the chief of police arrived in the vicinity.

The young fellow was fined this morning five dollars and costs, of $7.60 altogether.

He was only eighteen years of age.

The second case was against another young man, who pleaded guilty to being drunk and disorderly on August 13th, on the corner of Sherbrooke and George streets. He paid over the usual $7.60.

PEOPLE STARVING

Sufferers at Campbellton Have Not the Mere Necessities of Life—Without Food or Shelter—Review Opens Its Columns for Fund for the Destitute Nova Scotians.

The people of Campbellton are starving. The recent fire which swept the whole town left the people without food or shelter, and they are in a pitiable condition. Relief has been sent from several points but the supply is entirely inadequate to the demand, and the citizens of the Nova Scotia town are in a condition of deplorable want.

In response to popular suggestion, the Review has decided to open a fund for the benefit of the sufferers. Subscriptions sent to this office will be acknowledged in the paper the day they are received, and will be forwarded to Campbellton through the local office of the Bank of Nova Scotia, the head office of which has interested itself in a most active way in the relief work in Campbellton.

It is trusted that the response to this appeal to the citizens of Peterborough will be a very generous one.

2 MURDERERS ARE AT LARGE

Special to the Review.

Hamilton, Aug. 15.—Wm. A. Moir, better known as Gunner Moir, of London, who murdered Sereant Carruthers, of Wolsley barracks, and R. F. Taggart, who murdered his wife in Toronto, escaped from Hamilton Asylum early this morning. There is no doubt the men had assistance, in making their get away. Their escape was discovered about 5.30 a.m., and investigation shows the men had been provided with a set of keys, which insured the opening of the doors necessary to their escape. The asylum officials believe there was an automobile waiting for the men, and that the escape took place about three o'clock.

A Curiosity

Mr. Arthur Beilghem has in his possession something in the nature of a piece of freak basswood, on which appears as graved the shape of a prefect maple leaf.

The imprint had penetrated the complete thickness of the tree which was about one foot in diameter and how the maple leaf got there in the first place is a mystery.

The tree was cut down near Bailieboro by Mr. Alfred Coates, of the B. F. Ackerman Company.

THREE PLACES ROBBED

DAYLIGHT DIDN'T BOTHER THIS THIEF; TWO ROBBERIES

Sunday Morning Tresspasser Got Into Evan's Tailor Shop and Hickey's Shoe Store Through Rear Windows--A Case of Mistaken Identity Was All That Eluded Him From Clutches ot Two Passersby

While none of the many valuables lying loose around the Review Office are missing, two of this office's alleyway neighbors, Evans' tailor shop and Hickey's boot shop, suffered somewhat from the visitation of a bold Sunday morning pilferer. The term pilferer, it would seem, is advisedly used, for the stealer, from indications, does not appear to be a robber with very highly developed professional qualifications.

In the first place he didn't take as large a quantity of goods from either place as the finished thief would appropriate, and in the second place he chose a most precarious time in Hickey's shop at least in which to commit the deed.

THREE SUITS AND FOUR PAIRS OF BOOTS.

Three suits of clothes representing a retail total of $75, are missing from the tailor shop, while the boot merchant found four empty boxes which had contained number nine shoes, as silent witnesses of the theft in the latter place. To the Review this morning Mr. Hickey stated that more goods may have been stolen but the four missing pairs were all he had trace of on hurried investigation.

POLICE ON TRAIL.

In the meantime the police have the case in hand, and while no direct official information is given out from this source, it is learned on excellent authority that they have promising clues, and it would not be surprising if results were obtained in the next forty-eight hours.

AN ILL-CHOSEN TIME.

A chance to catch the indiscreet operator in the shoe thefts was afforded yesterday morning about a quarter to eight, but was overlooked on account of the fact that the parties who happened along at the time thought it was Mr. Hickey himself who was in the repair shop of his store. At the hour mentioned Ralph Chambers, who is employed in Storey & Leary's livery, which has a side entrance into the lane, and Patrick May, the yardman of the American Hotel, were walking along the lane when they noticed someone in the rear shop. They paid no particular attention to the man, thinking he was Mr. Hickey. He was opening the door at the time from the inside.

IT WAS THE THIEF.

Later examination showed, however, that the door was open and the bird had flown. The empty boxes gave evidence of the theft, and Mr. Frank Lane, of Lane & Eano's undertaking rooms, was informed of the occurrence and immediately telephoned Mr. Hickey, who came to the shop to investigate the loss.

REMOVED WINDOW LIGHTS.

It is presumed that the same fellow effected the entrance to Evans' shop, which was made from the rear. In both cases a pane of glass was removed from the window and through this the thief crawled.

WORE HEAVY BLUCHERS.

In Hickey's shop a pair of number nine Ames Holden blucher shoes, of the heavy kind, that is used for outside work, was left behind by the thief who apparently put on a pair of the new boots he stole, the four pairs of which were, as before noted, all number nine.

Mr. John Kylie, the Hunter street shoe merchant, is the local retailer of the Ames Holden shoe, but stated to the Review this morning that as he sold such a number of that brand of heavy shoes it would be impossible for him to give any idea as to who the thief might be.

THIEVES BREAK INTO A CHARLOTTE STREET SHOP

Stole Tobacco, Razors and Money From Paterson's Tonsorial Parlors—Robbery Committed After Closing Time on Saturday Night—Got in Through Cellar Window.

A daring burglary was committed between Saturday evening and Sunday morning at Mr. Bruce Patterson's barber shop on Charlotte street.

The thief or thieves obtained an entrance through the rear cellar window dow, and came up the cellar stairs at the back of the shop.

They obtained a large quantity of tobacco, and cigars of which about twelve boxes were taken, seventen razors, and also money to the amount of about twelve dollars.

Mr. Parterson was not aware of the burglary until about three o'clock on Sunday afternoon, when on entering the shop, he discovered the till rifled and the razors and cigars missing.

Mr. Patterson believes that he is aware of the names of the perpetators of the theft and has placed the matter in the hands of the chief of police who are working on the case.

She sings with much sweetness and fine expression, and is the possessor of a voice of rare quality.

The bride's gown was of white liberty satin, trimmed with lace and draped with pearls and she wore a beautiful picture hat.

TORONTO NINE WON BOTH GAMES WITH BALTIMORE

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 13.—Before the largest crowd at Oriole Park this season the Orioles lost both games of the double-header to Toronto to-day—3 to 1 and 10 to 2. Fully nine thousand fans stayed through both contests.

The Leafs, by taking both games to-day, made it four straights from Baltimore. Big Ed. Killian, recently acquired from the Detroit Tigers, and a left-hander, combined with Bill O'Hara's dinkey two-base hit in the sixth inning, was responsible for the first game. Doc Newton, who pitched in the first game of the series, again turned the trick in the second game to-day. Lefty Russell, the $12,000 beauty, started the second game and lasted only one inning, when he retired in favor of Malloy.

Some odd plays were pulled off by Bill Byers, who caught in both games. In the first inning the first three batters singled, only to be pegged out trying to steal second. Shaw singled while Mullen was up, and started for second. Bill, by a perfect throw, nipped him. Mullen singled, and while O'Hara was batting he thought he would try and boost his average a bit and started for second. Byers was again on the job, and threw to Sammy Strang, who was waiting with the ball. O'Hara shortly after beat out an infield hit, and while Slattery was up he was not satisfied with the showing his team mates had ahead of him, and essayed to show the fans how fast he was on the paths and started to steal second, and again Byers was on the job and Frick took the throw. This will probably be a record for the season.

Vickers kept hits scattered until the sixth inning, when Shaw, the first batter up, bunted safely. Mullen walked. O'Hara, after fouling a lot of balls, picked one to his liking, and sent it to right field just over the foul line. Goode made a hard attempt to get it. He got his hand on it, but fell in the crowd in doing so, and Shaw had scored. Mullen was on third and O'Hara on second when the ball was recovered. Slattery raised one to Frick. With all the infield playing in Delehanty slammed a hot one at Frick, which hit him in the chest, and Del was safe at first and Mullen scored. Mc Donald sacrificed and O'Hara scored with the third run.

SECOND GAME.

With Russell in the box in the second game, the fans thought he would even things up. Shaw started the fireworks in the very first inning by doubling to left. Mullen walked, O'Hara singled and Shaw scored, Millen going to third. Slattery, and Delehanty walked, but Del was forced at second by McDonald, Mullen scoring. Strang, who got the ball at second, threw badly to Heitmuller, who covered first in place of Clancy, and O'Hara and Slattery scored. The Leafs got three more in the eighth, when, with none down, Tonneman singled to centre. Newton beat out a bunt. Shaw sacrificed and both runners advanced a peg. Mullen singled to left and Tonneman scored. While O'Hara was batting Mullen stole second. O'Hara fanned. Slattery sent one past third for two sacks, and Newton and Mullen crossed the pan. The batter was out trying to steal third, when Delehanty was at bat.

Pitcher Corey was left at the Mercy Hospital here. He has symptoms of typhoid fever.

GOSSIP OF ROPED ARENA

Promoter Hugh McIntosh is after Packey McFarland to visit Australia this winter and meet three fighters there for a total purse of $17,500, with transportation paid both ways for both he and his trainer, Pat Kennally. Packey is seriously thinking of accepting the offer. If he goes he will meet Rudolph Unholz and Johnny Summers.

If Billy Papke and Stanley Metchel cannot get a big enough purse to fight for in America, they can go to Paris and battle. Al Lippe, matchmaker of the Wagram club oven there, says that he has been authorized to offer a purse of $10,000 for the men to fight for in a twenty-round contest any time after October 15. The fighters will also be allowed transportation each way.

Old Jem Mace, once the most famous pugilist in the world, is making his second attempt to secure an old age pension fund of $2.50 a week from the British Government. Three years ago Mace made his first effort. He was disgusted with the red tape and "quit cold," as the ring saying has it. For a number of years the old fellow has been struggling about, but the alms house looms so dangerously near that the old-time gladiator must take extreme measures now.

Joe Jeannette, the colored heavyweight, says if Sam Langford is anxious for a battle he will gladly take him on at either the National sporting club or the Fairmount A.C. "I don't think Langford has a chance of getting on a match with Johnson, and on that account I am perfectly willing to meet him if suitable inducements are offered," said Jeannette.

When the fighting game is resumed again in the city in the south it looks like a sure bet that the police officials in every one of them will issue an order that no colored fighters will be allowed to fight white men. This order has already been given out at Memphis, Tenn., and the managers of the clubs down there say they will obey it.

Tom Jones, manager of Ad. Wolgast, the lightweight champion, says that he is perfectly willing to let Wolgast fight Packey McFarland either in America or in England, providing a large enough purse is offered, and McFarland is willing to weigh in at 133 pounds at the ring side. Jones knows perfectly well that McFarland cannot make ring side weight, and that is the reason for his sudden outburst.

Charles Cutler is another wrestler who wants to turn fighter. Cutler, by the way, wants to get a quarrel with Frank Gotch. Cutler has mapped out a comprehensive program and wants the public to know all about it. Cutler knows all about Jack Johnson. He was his sparring partner once, and while he frankly admits that the negro has it on him in skill, cleverness and speed, he believes his own strength and gameness might carry the day. According to Cutler's story, he fought Johnson once in Reading, Pa.

Bill Lang has the advantage over Ketchel in height, weight, reach and there is not much question but that he can hit just as hard as Ketchel can. Lang has looked over Ketchel's record and he has come to the conclusion from looking over his fights with Papke and Joe Thomas that either Ketchel hasn't as stiff a punch as he is credited with having, or else he is unable to land it very often. Lang feels that if Papke and Thomas were able to go the long-distance route with Ketchel, even though they were defeated, that Ketchel will never get him, and looking at it in a cool, matter-of-fact way, there seems to be considerable in the Australian's conclusion.

"He'll not knock me out, that's sure," said Lang the other day. "They tell me Ketchel can go like a streak for six rounds," observed Lang. "Well, he can't get me in six rounds, and I'm better the longer I go."

Lang's measurements show him to be a well-put-up athlete. Here they are:

Height—6 feet, 3-4 inch.
Forearm—12 inches.
Biceps—13 inches.
Neck—17 1-2 inches.
Chest (normal)—43 1-2 inches.
Chest (expanded)—47 inches.
Waist—36 inches.
Hips—41 inches.
Thigh—25 inches.
Calf—15 1-2 inches.
Weight—190 pounds.
Reach—75 inches.
Wrist—8 inches.
Ankle—9 1-2 inches.
Age—27 years.

SEASON FOR DUCK SHOOTING

During the last session of the Ontario Legislature a number of changes were made in the game laws, one of which was the changing of the opening day for duck shooting from Sept. 1st to Sept. 15th. At this latter date the young ducks of the different varieties that breed in and around our marshes and swamps during the spring and summer will be larger, in better plumage, and, if left unmolested up to that time in feeding upon the wild rice, etc., should be in prime condition.

Johnson's Troubles

The Ottawa Free Press says; Champion Jack Johnson is trying to purchase a mansion in the fashionable heart of Brooklyn, and no little fear is being entertained by the quiet, respectable people of a heavyweight being domiciled in their midst. They have maintained its exclusive character for over half a century, and now they have visions of sparring exhibitions on the Sabbath on the front porch; cake walks in the front parlor till all hours of the night; watermelons being grown in the front yard, and a bevy of sparring partners and trainers in the back yard. The quiet respectable people have lost a lot of sleep over the affair. The price asked for the house is $62,500 and Jack will jump at the chance of buying it.

USED PIGEONS

One of the most novel systems of securing pictures ever employed by a paper was that made use of by one in San Francisco to get quick returns from the Jeffries-Johnson fight. The scheme was worked by carrier pigeons released from the ringside at Reno while the fight was in progress.

The films were carried over the Sierra Mountains, the pigeons soaring to a height of 5,400 feet, developed and photo-engraved in the office at San Francisco, and printed in the paper the next morning. The height to which the pigeons flew set a record for homing pigeons.

The distance from Reno to Oakland is 190 miles. Twenty-two birds were released, but only six arrived in time for the pictures to be published. The high altitude and the heat were unfavorable to the flight of the pigeons. The birds were from the finest strain of carrier pigeons in California, and were picked for strength and former fast time flights.

The pictures of the fight were the size of postage stamps. Four or five would be taken and the film placed in an aluminum capsule, three-quarters of an inch in diameter. The camera was the size of a watch, and the photographer used his sleeve for a dark room. The capsules containing the films were attached to the right leg of the pigeon by a metal clip. When the receptacle was securely fastened to the leg, the pigeons were pitched high in the air, and circling to a height of 200 to 250 feet, set their faces towards the west and began the long flight over the mountains.

Give the Family Income a Chance

Perhaps the family income is big enough after all.

Perhaps the reason it does not seem to go as far as it should is because you do not spend it thriftily enough.

Perhaps when you buy, you do not go to the right stores at the right time.

If you read the store advertisements regularly you will soon see ways of stretching your dollars.

You will soon learn where to go for this and where to buy that.

You will soon be giving your "expense money" a chance to buy you the things you now need and other things that a little surplus money might make you think you need—

But which you cannot now afford.

FORGET IT

Brandon Sun.

If you've made a grave mistake—
One you don't mean to make,
Just—forget it!

Don't let it cause you pain,
Just don't make the same again;
And forget it!

There are many more like you,
Who have done the same thing too;
So—forget it!

There's a future in this world,
And to those it is unfurled
Who—forget it!

So just buckle up your mind,
And encouragement you'll find
To—forget it!

Make up your mind "to dare and do"
So—forget it!

Good Form

It requires tact to be a strict yet popular mother of a grown daughter, for to steer between the points of being too much in evidence and not sufficiently so requires thought, etiquette and common sense, says an authority on questions of etiquette.

It is true that the continued presence of an older person acts as something of a kill-joy to younger ones, so parents need not be in the room all the time, for girls must learn through experience to be easy and gracious hostesses, an art they will not acquire if it is always done for them.

Good form demands that a man when calling upon an unmarried woman living with her parents or guardians shall send a card for them. For him to omit this courtesy is the height of rudeness or ignorance of good manners, and in either case he can be severely criticised. When the card is sent the mother or father goes into the reception room and remains for ten minutes or more, but ten minutes is long enough. It is not necessary that both parents shall see the caller. One is enough, and neither goes in with the daughter. Whichever decides to be present follows ten or fifteen minutes after the young hostess.

As soon as the older person enters she or he is included in the conversation. If some one special topic is under discussion she is told what it is, so she can take up the thread where her entrance broke it off.

To ignore the presence of an older person, talki[illegible] he or she has no knowledge, is nothing less than boorish.

The parent or guardian taking part in the conversation for a short time excuses himself or herself. This individual does it frankly, making no pretext of trying to slip out. The woman or man rises and says good night to the caller, saying that it has been pleasant to see him and she or he hopes the caller will come again soon. Then the parent asks him to excuse her. By the fact that she has gone into the room and been cordial to the guest she has expressed her approval of his acquaintance. If she does not like him and prefers that her daughter should not know him she remains in the room throughout the entire visit.

To Overcome Embarrassment.

If you are so shy that it is painful, instead of trying to brazen it out or retiring into your shell, go in for cultivating self forgetfulness.

It is misery to be conscious of embarrassment. No one knows this better than the victim, yet often she sees no way to conquer her feelings.

Sometimes she makes the attempt by fighting her failing. Generally she errs in overdoing and appears pert, rude or aggressive when in reality she is working hard to feel at ease.

Too often she doesn't put up any fight. Because she is shy she shuns every one and every place where she will feel uncomfortable and too soon is hopelessly submerged by her unfortunate self consciousness.

The only certain cure for embarrassment is self forgetfulness. There is an old saying that the one sure way to make friends is to be a friend. This may be paraphrased to read that the one way not to think too much of yourself is to fill up your thoughts with some one else.

The next time you dread going into society try to recall some one of your acquaintances who is shier and more awkward than you are. Determine to make her enjoy herself for one time at least. If your efforts are honest you will be surprised to find that you have been so busy in good times giving that you have forgotten to be embarrassed.

The next time you are caught by your failing hunt up another buffer for your embarrassment, and before long not only will your shyness be in leash, but you will find you have become popular.

Question For Guest to Ask.

"At what time do you breakfast?" is a question for a guest to ask when bidding her hostess good night after the first day of the visit has expired. Then it is that an explanation is forthcoming as to the domestic habits of the household, and to these habits a good guest will conform willingly. If it is the practice of the family to gather about a breakfast table promptly every morning, then it is bad form for the visitor to disturb her entertainers by forcing them to wait until a slow toilet is completed. Many hostesses in country houses send to the bedroom a tray with a light breakfast in the morning, and the family breakfast table no longer exists. This is considered easier for the household and more comfortable for the guests, who are able to read their mail and attend to correspondence before leaving their rooms.

Length of Formal Call.

A formal visit should last twenty minutes at least, and half an hour is not too long if one is interested. If there is no clock in the room some guess can be made.

All first calls [illegible] returned within a month of the time they are made.

Smart Stationery.

For their personal correspondence women often have their initials in a medallion at the top of their writing paper, and girls have their Christian name stamped in facsimile of their handwriting across one corner.

Two Chinamen were caught in a freight car at Windsor, bound for Chicago, by U.S. immigration authorities.

Three persons were killed and four injured when a train crashed into an automobile near Rochester, Ind., last Friday night.

SIGN OF THE GOLDEN LION

THE MARCH OF MORALITY

Within a few months the lottery of France will be a thing of the past. Modern progress looks with a severe eye on institutions which once were considered entirely innocent, and the lottery now is damned as pernicious gambling. With its going the hope [illegible] will fade out of many grey lives, [illegible] many a wage-earner will be saved from the temptation [illegible] his family of comforts and necessaries in order to woo fortune.

The first knowledge we have of the lottery taking root in France, says the Kansas City Star, is in the reign of Francis I. At the same time it was introduced into Holland and Switzerland.

In June, 1909, some Socialist deputies put before the chamber a bill to abolish the lottery. The assembled members were told that an institution that had been in existence before the Christian era was immoral and a swindle. These assertions raised a storm of opposition and indignation, as every lottery must be authorized by the Government The Socialists, however, had a strong ally in Clemenceau, who was then Prime Minister, and he declared that he also was against the lottery, and now that the question had been raised he would authorize no more and furthermore would do all in his power to liquidate those that were then in operation. Briand, the present Prime Minister, decreed the liquidation of all the lotteries—41 in number.

Practically all the working people invest regularly in lottery tickets, but their outlay is generally on the 30 cent ticket, and on the days that the winning numbers are to be announced, lines of bareheaded women and men in working dress stand eagerly waiting on the pavement for the lucky number is to make them rich. Grey-haired men who have played the game religiously for years and never had their hopes realized by one winning, continue their monthly risk and buy a ticket or two with expectation just as keen as in the early days when as youths they made their first venture in this fascinating game of chance.

All say to themselves, "If I win the lottery this month I will do so and so." This is the class that will feel most keenly the closing of the big game of chance. What future outlook is there for them they argue.

The sudden acquisition of wealth by [illegible] cause strange developments. Last year Mme. Hofer, who occupied the humble position of canteen woman in the 28th Dragoons at Sedan, made her monthly contribution to the lottery—a habit of years. Her faithfulness was rewarded by the big prize, $200,000. Her prosperity gladdened the hearts of a multitude of men, 40,000 of whom offered, in the next morning's post, their heart and hand. Thirty thousand others, not caring to deal with Cupid, modestly asked for sums of money. Mme. Hofer was not dazzled by her change of fortune to such an extent that her business instincts were smothered. On the contrary, she made a favorable deal with another woman, who bought out her rights as canteen woman. A persistent and ardent lieutenant of the 28th Dragoons won her affections and they were married in June, 1909. Army life suddenly became distasteful to the lucky bridegroom, so he retired from the service and they started housekeeping at St. Maude, a suburb of Paris. This wonderful transformation in the life of a canteen woman inspired a Frenchman's pen and a novel has been the outcome. It is called "The Cantiniere's Millions."

A case of French fidelity was shown when Mathilde Cavilles won a prize of $100,000. She was pretty and extremely poor. When it was known that she had won a large stage at the lottery the most flattering offers of marriage were received by her, even members of the nobility being willing to bestow their titles upon her. Mathilde's young head was not turned by these offers, all of which were refused. She married the simple workman to whom she was engaged, bought a fine piece of property, and gathered around her under the same roof the parents of both sides.

THE CRIPPEN INQUEST

London Times.

The inquest was opened on Monday, the jury being sworn to investigate the cause of death of "some human remains now lying dead." The jury viewed the remains through a glass screen.

The principal witness was Chief Inspector Dew, of Scotland Yard, who described the discovery of the remains in the cellar. After taking up four shovelfuls of earth he came upon a piece of human flesh and had to cease his work for a while on account of its decomposition. He sent for the divisional surgeon and police constables and had the whole cellar dug out, finding a large quantity of human flesh but no head, hands or feet. Among the things which they dug out was a "Hinde's curler," with a small piece of hair adhering to it. There was also a small piece of hair in a portion of a man's handkerchief, two of the corners of which had been tied in a sort of reef knot. There were no bones, simply one mass of human flesh, the lawrgest piece of which was not bigger than the handbag on the table in court (about 12in. by 4in. by 6in.) Some one had carved the flesh off the bones and buried it in quicklime. The bones might have been burnt or dropped into the river. He also found a part of a female's undervest, encrusted with hard cement-like material, and there was a piece of coarse string 15 in. long, another piece 11ins. long, two pieces of cloth, and a sheet of brown paper with bloodstains on it and another piece of string. One of the pieces of string had some cement attached to it. The details were, he said, horrible.

Dr Marshall, Divsiional Surgeon of Police, said that he was not prepared to swear whether the remains were those of a male or female. There were not only pieces of flesh, but the thorax and abdomen and internal organs were present, but no part of the pelvis or the external parts thereof. He thought they were female remains, but he could not at present positively say so on scientifc grounds. The perpetrator of the outrage had tried to obliterate not only all evidence of identiyt but all traces of sex. Some of the organs were wonderfully preserved, the heart, for instance being in excellent condition. There was one part of the remains as to which they had quite an argument during the examination, and he could not say whether or not it was part of a female breast. If the person who buried the remains had desired to leave no evidence of sex he made a blunder if he left a breast there. The muscles of the buttock and the thigh very much pointed to a female. He thought that the work of dissection was done in the cellar, and whoever did it must have taken his time about it, for it was a most deliberate and long process.

The inquest was adjourned until August 15.

To the Editor of the Review.

Peterborough, Aug. 14.

Sir,—Will you kindly allow me space in your paper to reply to the health officer's statement regarding the milk and its relation to infant mortality. We milkmen resent the statement. It is an injustice to our business. I for one know of a number of children who are supplied with milk by me, and I would like the health officer to call on them and note their healthy condition. I also know of some who do not take milk who have died. He spoke of the result on the milk after it being carried around all day. Can we deliver it at nights? We also take the most particular pains with milk as regards cleanliness and a sanitary condition of receptacles for it, and give our customers complete satisfaction. It is a rank injustice to compare milk to the sewer.

Her husband, the late John Craig, died about one year ago.

Surviving her are five sons and two daughters. The sons are Joseph Craig, J. T. Craig and Bert, of this city; Archie, of Montreal, and Samuel H., of Hespeler, and the two daughters are Mrs. A. G. Gillespie, of East City, and Mrs. Frank Burdette, of Hamilton.

CARMAN TAKES ANOTHER TILT AT HIGHER CRITIC

In Discussing the Evil Effects of Too Great Prosperity Among the Members of the Church He Says That Wealthy Men Bring in Pleasing But Unwholesome Doctrines.

Victoria, B.C., Aug. 16.—Rev. Dr. Carman, general superintendent of the Methodist Church, yesterday morning delivered his charge to the assembled general conference, which opened yesterday, and which will continue three weeks. His references to the influence of wealthy men within the church, with an especial reference to Sherbourne Street Church, Toronto, and its relationship with Rev. George Jackson, have created much comment."

"I have but one anxiety concerning our methodism," said Mr. Carman. "It is that we be saved from worldliness and spiritual sloth, and indifference, and all their consequences in every form, shape, measure and degree. Herein, possibly, is our greatest present danger; we are becoming wealthy, and may easily lose the vigor and tension of spiritual life, and the voice and tone of aggressive evangelism. We have time for vain jangling and oppositions of science, falsely so called. It is very easy to slacken up our push and pace; be satisfied with our attainments and sink into the lap of formalism and naturalism and of worldly comfort and ease. At such times and under such conditions novelties are preached for the well-proven doctrines of converting grace and sanctifying power. The eye of the church is dimmed and her arm is paralyzed. There is no strength in her movement, or victory in her march.

"Even good men are dazzled with the glitter of theories and befooled with empty speculation. The grey solidity and stern simplicity of the truth have no charms for their intoxicated understanding. The tendency, current and force in the spiritual life of our humanity, left to itself, is ever downward and not upward, as some do vainly and erroneously teach. They build up conjecture, assumption and human art and device to our utter undoing. This is heathenism; this alone in the Christian and Biblical ethnology explains the paganism of the nations.

Dr. Carman then made a direct reference to Dr. Jackson's connection with Sherbourne Street Church and with Victoria College, in which he referred to "incipient heathenism," adding:

"You will see I am decidedly with our chancellor in stiffening up the conception and clarifying the idea of the personality of God and man in the instruction of the colleges. And I think we could find half a dozen Methodist superannuates who could and would do it."

TWO CARS AT FALLS COLLIDE ON BRINK OF WHIRLPOOL

Nine Persons Are Injured When Crowded Trolley, Rushing Down to Boat, Fails to Answer to its Brakes and Dashes Into Up-Bound Car.

Niagara Fals, N.Y., Aug. 16.—In a head-on collision between two trolley cars on the Gorge route last evening, nine persons were injured, one seriously. The collision occurred at Swift Drift, at the point in the gorge where the river breaks into the swift rapids above the Whirlpool. The ledge upon which the tracks rest is narrow, and on the riverside there is a sheer drop of 20 feet into the churning waters. Both cars were shattered by the terrific force of the collision, but neither left the rails.

The accident was due to the failure to work of the brake on the down river car. Above Swift Drift there is a stretch of double track, where the up and down cars meet. The down river car, which left the Falls shortly before 6 o'clock, arrived at the double track ahead of schedule time. The motorman applied the air to stop his car, but the brakes failed to respond.

At this time a Lewiston car was coming up the sharp grade from the Whirlpool. The motorman on it saw the down car approaching at high speed, and heard the motorman wildly clanging the gong. Realizing that something was wrong, he reversed the power, but before he could bring his car to a standstill, the runaway car crashed ito it. Both cars were completely wrecked. So near were the cars to the edge of the river that pieces of the wreckage fell into the water, and were carried down to the Whirlpool.

A special car brought the injured to Niagara Falls. Those who remain at the hospitals are: Samuel Sadies, Bowling Green, Ky., cuts and bruises about head and lower limbs, in bad shape; Mrs. Jarritt, San Francisco, and Mrs. Melvin, Newark, Ohio, bad cuts and both badly shocked; Mrs. Martindale, 463 Manning avenue, Toronto, bruised hip and cuts about head; Mrs. James Gordon and Miss Elizabeth Campbell of Ottumwa, Iowa, suffering from shock and bruises; Charles Vanettes, conductor, Niagara Falls, badly bruised and cut. The two motormen, Charles Vaughn and Henry Furman, were both caught in their vestibules. Vaughn's condition is critical. The 200 uninjured passengers walked up the track, about half a mile, to the top of the bank.

HOW MOIR AND TAGGART GOT AWAY FROM ASYLUM

Murderer of Sergt. Lloyd and Slayer of Wife Have Aid From Outside and Flight is Made by Means of an Auto About Two O'clock in Morning.

Hamilton, Aug. 16.—Dr. English, superintendent of the Hamilton Asylum, intimated last night that he had discovered the first clue to the mysterious disappearance of Moir and Taggart, the escaped murderers. He had found out definitely that an automobile without lights was seen in the grounds of the asylum at about two o'clock yesterday morning. Word, he said, had also reached him that an auto, also without lights, passed through Beamsville, bound east, at about 5.30. The doctor thinks that this goes a long way towards clearing up the mystery as to how the men got away so completely and so quickly.

The efforts of the provincial authorities will now be directed towards finding out whether or not an automobile passed over the bridge at the Falls. Detective Miller made an examination of the asylum grounds and buildings yesterday afternoon, but refused to give out anything to the press about any discoveries he may have made.

The following is a description of the two men:

William Alexander Moir—Height, 5 feet 6 inches; slightly built; dark hair and moustache; light-colored suit of clothes, with small check in it; tan lace boots; may be wearing a cap; age, 26 years and 6 months.

Robert F. Taggart—Fifty years of age; 5 feet 10 inches in height; stout build; grey hair and moustache; blue eyes; dark brown suit made in the institution, fitting loosely; black lace shoes.

It was 5.30 in the morning when Taggart's cell door was found open. Investigation then revealed Moir's absence. A knotted sheet hung from his window to the ground. It was believed he was furnished with keys from the outside. A bar in the narrow transom above the door had been removed sometime before evidently, the three-inch screws being replaced by wooden imitations until the time came to get away. Then Moir squeezed through the 30 by 6 inch aperature, a wire, which he attached to a bolt on the door, easing his descent. He then made his way to the clothes-room and put on day attire. Then he released Taggart, who evidently left in a hurry.

This was Moir's third attempt at escape. Once he attacked the guard, next he sawed the window bars with a file. Moir was convicted in April, 1908, at London, Ont., for shooting Col.-Sergt. Lloyd at London barracks, while drunk. Medical evidence was submitted to show that he was an epileptic and he escaped the gallows.

Taggart, a milkman, killed his wife at their home in Sydenham street, Toronto, early one winter's morning in 1898, and surrendered to the police.

WHISKY DRINKER DIES FOR $5.00

Bisbee, Ariz., Aug. 14.—Victor Anderson, a miner, aged 30, won $5 last night by drinking a quart of whiskey in eight minutes. His relatives will get the $5, as Anderson died in a half hour.

Q.O. RIFLES ARE WORKING HARD

Quebec, Aug. 16.—Work was commenced in earnest at the Queen's Own camp at St. Joseph de Levis yesterday, and before leaving the men had smartened up wonderfully in their drill. In the morning each company was handed over to an instructor and put through their facings. The material is here and it is expected that the smartest drill instructors in Canada will make them equal to any regular troops in Canada before leaving on Saturday. The men know their drill and all that is needed is practice.

It is said that, no matter how well soldiers are fed, they will kick. The food is much better than usually found in military camp, but, because it is not as good as home fare, they grumble. Large numbers of them went without supper and ate in Quebec last night. Notwithstanding the hard work the men are having a good time.

The camp is situated on the heights beside the St. Lawrence, in a small natural valley [illegible] miles below Levis, at St. Joseph de Levis. In the opening of the valley can be seen the waters of the river and the farms, still retaining the same elongated formation in which they were first laid out in the infancy of Canada, the Montmorency Falls, and in the distance the Laurentian Mountains.

The men are not the only ones being drilled. The non-commissioned and commissioned officers are getting their share. A riding school is being conducted for the benefit of mounted officers.

Sir Henry Pellatt and the officers of the corps have been invited by Lt.-Col. Davidson and officers of the 6th Royal Rifles of Quebec to dinner tomorrow.

FIVE BARNS DESTROYED

Berlin, Aug. 16.—Lightning caused heavy losses within a radius of a few miles of Berlin yesterday evening. Almost simultaneously two big barns, within half a mile of each other, three mile east of here, were struck and totally destroyed with the whole season's crop. One belonged to David Thaler, and the other to A. Kinzie. The insurance will not nearly cover the loss. Anthony Mattusch, near Freeport, fared still worse. His barn, crops, implements, eight horses and seven calves were burned. Loss partially covered by insurance. Mr. Rutherford's barn, near Strassburg, was also burned down.

BOY'S NECK WAS BROKEN

Toronto, Aug. 16.—Douglas Allen, four years of age, 115 De Grassi street, was picked up yesterday noon in Bolton avenue, just after a hook and ladder truck had passed. He was taken into a nearby house by Policeman Miller, and attended by Dr. Hamilton, Broadview avenue, who discovered that his neck was broken. It is believed that he was trying to steal a ride on the truck, which was on its return from a blacksmith shop. No one on the truck saw the accident. Coroner Graham will hold an in[illegible]

CONSERVATIVE CHIEFTAIN AT GUYSBORO

Halifax, Aug. 16.—Not since the days of Sir John A. Macdonald has a political leader received such an enthusiastic reception in Nova Scotia, as is being accorded R. L. Borden on the present tour of his native province. The great Conservative chieftain held the third meeting of his tour in Guysboro yesterday, and it was the largest and most enthusiastic ever held in the country. The meeting was held in the court house, the largest building in the town, and it was packed to the doors. A notable feature was the large number of Liberals present. The county is a Liberal stronghold, and yesterday's meeting was largely composed of Liberals.

After dealing with purely provincial matters, Mr. Borden turned his attention to recent utterances of the Prime Minister in the west. The Prime Minister has dwelt with much pathos upon all the differences in the ranks of the Conservative party in respect to the naval question.

CHAS. SPIERS COMMITTED FOR TRIAL

[illegible] Charles Spiers, the tailor, arrested here on a charge of bigamy, came up for a preliminary hearing yesterday, and was committed to Cobourg for trial. Mrs. Spiers No. 1 produced the Hebrew marriage certificate confirming her marriage to the defendant in New York. She also produced another certificate, showing that the defendant had married Miss Amelia Clarke of this town. Mrs. Spiers No. 1, and her brother, Mr. Jacobs, identified the prisoner as the former's husband. Spiers declined to give any evidence. He was allowed out on his own bail of $400 cash.

WALL COLLAPSED; FOUR ARE DEAD

Cornwall, Aug. 16.—Four Italians were instantly killed and 15 or 20 men, mostly foreigners, were more or less injured by the collapse of a concrete wall at Massena, N.Y., ten miles from here, yesterday morning. The T. A. Gillespie Co. of New York City are building an extension of the St. Lawrence Power Co.'s power house and dam, and one of the concrete units, which were built hollow, was being filled with concrete, when it burst, and the whole mass fell on the men who were working below.

Four of the injured were brought to the Hotel Dieu, Cornwall.

One son was drowned, another was lost in the brush and frozen to death, and a third died suddenly at home, whilst this last fatality has carried off the fourth and only remaining boy.

BIGAMY CHARGE AGAINST DOCTOR

Toronto, Aug. 16.—Dr. Herbert E. Sheppard, 64 years of age, who has practiced at 18 Gloucester street for a number of years, was arrested yesterday afternoon by Inspector Kennedy, of the morality department, upon a charge of bigamy. He was admitted to bail in the sum of $1,000.

son, Dr. D. King Smith of 22 Wellesley street, and his daughters, Mrs. A. D. Burritt and Mrs. McMurray of Toronto, and his widow, had been with him continually since recovery was despaired of.

The funeral will take place from the residence, 311 Jarvis street, on Wednesday afternoon at 2.30, and will be private. Interment will take place at Mount Pleasant Cemetery.

SECOND DANGER MARK PASSED

Hoboken, N.J., Aug. 16.—The watchers at the bedside of Mayor Gaynor of New York, breathed easy yesterday with the passing of the sixth day crisis.

"No indications of blood poisoning have developed, and the recovery of the patient is now practically assured," was the word given out by the attendants at St. Mary's Hospital, where the mayor has been since he was shot down last Tuesday by J. J. Gallagher.

Two periods of danger from blood poisoning have now been safely passed—that ending with the 48th hour after the shooting and yesterday's.

Mr. Gaynor awoke refreshed. His appetite was good and almost his first words were a request for breakfast. He was given coffee and eggs and later wine jelly and cream.

"I feel fit as a fiddle," he said to Dr. W. J. Arlitz and Dr. C. D. Dowd. He jokingly said, "I helped myself more than you medical fellows. I found how to cure my own cough."

The mayor discovered for himself that by lying in a certain posture he could rid himself of the irritating cough that has been bothering him for several days.

EXPOSITION WILL REOPEN

Brussels, Aug. 16—It will take many days to place the Belgian Exposition in a fit condition for the re-opening, although a large majority of the buildings are still intact. The known loss caused by the fire which swept through the "White City" yesterday is between $6,000,000 and $10,000,000. This is chiefly confined to the Belgian and British sections, but the damage by smoke and water has been general, and will add materially to the total loss.

WELCOME TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Revelstoke, B.C., Aug. 61.—Leaving Banff in the early morning, when Sir Wilfrid Laurier crossed the boundary line into the most westerly province of the Dominion, a telegram from Hon. Richard McBride was delivered, welcoming the federal Premier to British Columbia. The local member also boarded the train and felicitated Sir Wilfrid on his trip to the coast. The Prime Minister replied to his welcome in fitting terms, sending a message to Premier McBride.

A short stop was made at Golden, where Sir Wilfrid addressed a crowd of several hundred. Hon. George P. Graham spoke of the application of the Kootenay Central, which is projected from Golden to a point near Fernie, and said he was hopeful that that railway would shortly be built.

Addressing a large meeting here at 6 o'clock, Sir Wilfrid promised the erection of a large Government building, mentioning $100,000 as the cost. Hon. G. P. Graham said the Government would provide a subsidy for a railway at Death Rapids, to give connection via the Columbia River with the line of the C.P.R., and Grand Trunk Pacific.

"Until the people have all the transportation they need, we will not cease aiding railways," he declared.

Baltimore, Aug. 16.—The Baltimore Sun prints a sensational story linking the murder of Edith May Thompson Woodill near St. Michael's, Md., in June, 1909, with that of Mary Scott Castle Charlton, at Lake Como, Italy, and suggesting the possibility that Mrs. Charlton was the woman referred to in the letter of "Lame Bob" Eastman, as having killed Mrs. Woodill by striking her on the head with a full champagne bottle.

The Coins Are Good.

Toronto, Aug. 16.—Norman Tovell of the Receiver-General's office, said yesterday that the silver coins which have been given a reputation for being bogus because the crown on the "tail" side is next the same circumference as the crown on the King's head, are perfectly good. It is a peculiarity of the Canadian mint, that's all.

Double Drowning.

Brockville, Aug. 16.—A double drowning accident occurred Sunday at Crippen Lake, of the Rideau chain, near Lyndhurst, the victims being two young men named Harry Raymond and John Carlyle.

They, with three others, were bathing, and, getting beyond their depth, were drowned before assistance could reach them.

Miss Moyes was accompanied in the car by Mrs. John B. Burgess of Toronto, and Catheryn Abbott of 2,520 Euclid avenue. The car was driven by Henry Wick, jr. They returned to the hotel bruised and badly frightened.

A TOAST

IT IS ENCOURAGING TO THINK THAT IF THE BOARD OF HEALTH WILL NOT ACT, NATURE WILL. IF THE BOARD OF HEALTH WILL ALLOW STINKS AND GARBAGE DECAYING HERE AND THERE, NATURE WILL NOT. IF THE BOARD OF HEALTH BY ACTION SAYS "FLIES BREED ON," "STINKS, STINK ON," "GARBAGE PILE UP AND LET THINE INCENSE DISTIL AS THE DEW," NATURE SAYS, "I FORBID." MEANWHILE YOU HAD BETTER CHASE THOSE FLIES FROM OFF THE TABLE. THEY HAVE JUST HAD A FEED FROM THE DUNG PILE, AND THAT BIG FELLOW, HE IS FRESH FROM A SPITTOON; "HERE'S TO THE FLIES, THE COUNCIL AND THE BOARD OF HEALTH, THEIR FAST FRIENDS. BUT WINTER WILL SOON SEPARATE THEM.

AN ALERT OFFICER

There's nothing like being alert and independent. The law must be enforced. Now, last week the grocers of Ottawa held their annual picnic to Cornwall. One of the events was a greasy pig contest. The pig, well oiled, was itching for the fray. He knew he would spoil some one's clothes and break some one's watch or glasses before he was gathered in. Just as the signal for release was about to be given the representative of the S.P.C.A. stepped up and refused to allow the affair.

"I forbid it," he exclaimed, "on the ground of cruelty to animals."

Now, which animals did he mean?

HUMAN AND MILCH CATTLE

This month not less than one suicide every twenty-four hours has taken place in America, caused by the ill-fortune of poverty. It's all right for churches and gospel singers to say "Get right with God," but if a man mas a family depending on him and is out of food, is behind in the rent, and doesn't know where to get work, that slogan doesn't appear as feasible as it might to the well-fed gospelers.

In New York a man blew his brains out last week under just such conditions and this is no solitary case.

And contrast the human cattle of our great cities—families huddled together in one room—with the splendid appointments that Millionaire Peacock, of Pittsburg, will give his cows. Read the despatch;

Pittsburg, Aug. 15.—Not only is Alexander R. Peacock, millionaire, building himself an enormous and fancy chicken house on a $60,000 farm which he bought recently for the purpose of raising his own chickens to get fresh eggs, but he has also planned a model dairy to be located on the same farm.

Blue-blooded cows, 150 of them, are to stock this dairy, and it is to be up-to-date in every particular. The milk is to be delivered throughout the fashionable east end district in refrigerator auto cars.

The farm is 155 acres in extent. The dairy barn is to be as fine as many country dwellings. There will be perfect ventilation, light, heat and approved sanitation. Rooms containing baths for the cows will be provided for the cows will be provided for the use of the animals in cold weather. The teeth of the cows are to be scrubbed daily. Fifty thousand dollars is to be spent on the barn and improvements.

And then read the story of Mrs. Fuller, of New York city, in a corner of a dark basement, whose husband had deserted her, and whose child was found dead in her arms, starved to death. And Mrs. Fuller? O! she had merely gone insane with the foolish fancy that she was immensely rich. But the teeth of those precious cattle must be scrubbed daily.

LADIES GET WISE

Bowling is growing in popularity among ladies in Glasgow. The other day ten of them took part in games on the Corporation greens at Alexandra Park."—Dispatch.

Ladies of Peterborough, why don't you get in on this form of sport? Each fine afternoon the local bowling greens are crowded with enthusiasts, white shod and light hearted. Why should hubby appropriate this pleasure to himself? Take him tenderly by the arm when he asks you a favor and tell him that you want to learn to bowl. Tell that you can lie near the "kitty" as well as he. Yes, and why should he have all the hard work of sitting up with that "sick friend." The next time he springs that joke enlighten him by the fact that you have a sick friend, too, who would like to be soothed through the long hours of the night by your presence.

If he gets tipsy, suppose you get tipsy, too.

Why should hubby have a monopoly of all these good things?

CRAZY

Moir and Taggart are free. Moir's escapade is well remembered. He got drunk and shot a fellow soldier. Taggart, also drunk, merely killed a civilian—his wife. But they were both crazy. Sometime, away in the far-back their ancestors had acted strangely. So they did not hang them, as they would those who had wise ancestors. They put them in a cage on the mountain top at Hamilton, and paid men to watch them. But somehow or other these crazy people acted most sagely and escaped. They didn't even wake up the guards. Now, that's funny work for crazy people, isn't it? It's also strange comment on the law. It is said if a man has influential friends or money it's dead easy to be pronounced crazy. The more money the more crazy, the more influential the friends the finer the feed and the brighter the hope of escape. However, of course, that's all heresay.

THE NEW BRUNSWICK EXAMPLE

Conservative Government stops graft practiced by the Liberals same story right across the continent.

One of the regular developments of Canadian politics has come to the winning of the Provinces by the Conservatives, and the subsequent good results experienced by the said Provinces. Manitoba shook off the Greenway Government, and has done well under Mr. Roblin. Ontario thanks heaven three times a day that it dropped the Ross Government and took up with Sir James Whitney. Mr. McBride obtained power in British Columbia and rescued the Province from a desperate financial bog. The latest of the list is New Brunswick and in that Province people are beginning to see wh[illegible]-Pugsley rule meant. For example, in the Crown Lands Department the revenue is steadily increasing. This year it is $480,000; last year, $395,000; in 1908, $343,000; while the best the Liberal Administration could do was $321,000. To quote from the St. John Standard;

"The remarkable feature of the case is the fact that while the revenue of the surveyor general's department has increased by $160,000 or fifty per cent., it is well understood that the lumber cut on Crown Lands has not increased. There is no increased export of wood to correspond with the gain in Crown Land revenue. No trade returns and no increased milling activities can be found to show that more timber was cut last year than in the previous seasons. On the contrary, it is a matter of common knowledge that the lumber operations were reduced.

The plain fact is that the increased stumpage revenue, and much more than this increase, has been added to the income of the Province by honest and fair collection. The other plain fact is that for many years before the change of Government the revenue was robbed, or rather surrendered, to the extent of $100,000 to $150,000 a year. The provincial revenue must have suffered to the extent of at least $2,000,000.

Territorial revenue includes other items besides stumpage. These have not all shown so large a gain in three years. Stumpage revenue alone in 1907 was $186,000. This year it will be $332,000, a gain in stumpage alone of $152,000 or eighty-five per cent.

Here is the official statement of the Crown Lands lumber cut for the past five seasons. To any person in the least acquainted with the lumber business the statement itself is proof that the cut reported by the late Government was only a fraction of the actual quantity taken from the Government forests;

Year.	Feet.
1905-6	107,000,000
1906-7	149,000,000
1907-8	151,000,000
1908-9	295,000,000
1909-10	280,000,000

The lumbermen did not get the full benefit of these immunities. They were compelled to pay handsomely for their exemptions. Some of them are glad of the chance. They know now that they get fair play, and that they are all treated alike. The political collector no longer follows or precedes the seller, and lumbermen once more venture to own their own souls. That is worth something.

Thus, from the Atlantic to the Pacific; there is an unbroken record of Conservative turning Liberals out of office, and giving enormously better administration. It will be the same at Ottawa.

QUITE POSSIBLE

Toronto World.

"Gallagher's bullet may elect a president."

The heading "Quite Possible" is clipped from the Ottawa Journal. There is no surer way to make a good man or a right cause strong than to persecute it. It's like oil to the fire. The path of the reformer is ever strewn with disorder. Perhaps he falls, perhaps his followers are slain, but out from the blood comes new ideas, higher aims, more hope and broader visions. Groans and agony, through these real achievement is made against the worst obstacles.

ONTARIO SHOULD COUNT HER OWN PEOPLE

Toronto Telegram.

Quebec may have had her population swollen by an energetic census in 1901.

Ontario may have had her population reduced by an apathetic census the same year.

The British North America Act allows the other provinces of Confederation one seat in Parliament for every one-sixty-fifth of Quebec's population that is found within their borders.

An energetic census that makes the most of Quebec's population enlarges the unit of Quebec's Parliamentary representation and correspondingly decreases the representation of the other provinces. The Whitney Government should not leave the Federal authorities unchecked in their count of Ontario's population.

Ontario will never have the increase pro ratio to Quebec. It's an honor in Quebec to have a big family. A family of eighteen or twenty is no uncommon thing. It's a cause for ridicule in old Ontario.

These large families are not weaklings, either. They are not only strong in physique, but strong in faith. The family that is small in number in Quebec is pitied. The clergy believe in their parishioners increasing and multiplying according to scripture, and there is a prompt and gratifying response.

PAVEMENTS IN TORONTO.

Kingston Whig.

Toronto's committee on civic works has been discussing road pavements, and decided against putting down any more light asphalt. City Engineer Rust placed himself on record as in favor of sheet asphalt pavement as against asphalt block pavement, as he claimed it was the most satisfactory and durable. It will interest the local Board of Works to know that Toronto is still building macadam roads, and that the residents of a certain street objected to a recommendation of the city engineer that its macadam roadway be replaced by a medium asphalt pavement. The city engineer of Toronto told his works committee that there is a general movement in America in the direction of reducing the depth of the foundations for sidewalks, and that he was following out the new practice.

WATCH US GROW.

Blue Book.

A recent departmental return issued by the British Government indicates the empire's growth in population in the past 27 years:

	1881.	1908.
United Kingdom	34,884,848	45,008,421
Australia	2,250,198	4,275,306
New Zealand	489,933	972,982
Canada	3,745,574	6,945,000

The total population of the empire, which in 1881 was 303,694,000, had increased by 1901 to 385,357,000, while the area has reached 11,334,000 square miles, giving an average population of 34 to the square mile. The figure for the United Kingdom per square mile is 342.4, for British India 213.3, for New Zealand 7.8, for Australia 1.3, and for Canada, 1.4. About three-quarters of the total pouplation of the Empire are claimed by British India, which including the native states, has a population of nearly 300,000,000.

WOMAN'S WEAKNESS.

Belleville Ontario.

LADIES FIGHT ON STREET.

Orillia Packet.

While Mississaga street was thronged with people two of the fair sex had a lively set-to, in front of the Mulcahy block, with fists, feet and nails. The cause of the quarrel was not altogether clear to the by-standers, but it appeared that one of the combatants had declared that the other was "nobody," an imputation not light ly to be borne where disproof was so "handy." The closing argument of the lady whose honor had been impunged was a vicious kick in the ribs of her rival, which would have done credit to a trained athlete, and amply established her claim to "high" consideration.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

"Oho, monsieur in a hurry!" mocked the inspector. "Nothing, nothing!" He took out two boxes of cigars.

"Why the devil didn't you tell me you had them?" Hillard demanded wrathfully. To find the women by this stroke of luck and then to lose them again for two boxes of cigars! It was maddening.

The inspector went through Merrihew's possessions with premeditated leisure. Everything had to come out. He even opened the shaving sets, the collar box, the pin cases and the tie bag.

"Will you hasten?" asked Hillard. "We do not wish to miss this train."

"Others follow," said the inspector laconically.

Hillard produced a five franc piece. The inspector laughed without noise and shook his head. This one inspector is impervious to money or smooth speeches. He is the law personified, inexorable.

Hillard strained his eyes, but saw neither Kitty nor the veiled lady again. Doubtless they were already on the train. Had Merrihew been an old traveler he would have left him to get to Monte Carlo the best way he could, but Merrihew was as helpless as a child, and he hadn't the heart to desert him, though he deserved to be deserted.

Ding-ding! went the bell. Wheee! went the whistle. The train for Monte Carlo was drawing out, and they were being left behind. Hillard swore and Merrihew went white with impotent anger. If only he could hit something! The inspector smiled and went on with his deadly work. When he was certain that they could not possibly catch the train he handed the cigars to their owner and pointed to a sign the other side of the barricade.

"What shall I do now, Jack?" Merrihew asked.

"I refuse to help you. Find out yourself."

So Merrihew, hopeless and subdued, went into the room designated, saw the cigars taken out and weighed, took the bill and presented it with a hundred lire note at the little window in the off room.

Procuring his change, he found Hillard sitting disconsolately on the barricade.

"I hope you are perfectly satisfied," said Hillard, with an amiability which wouldn't have passed muster anywhere.

"Oh, I'm satisfied," answered Merrihew. He stuffed his pockets with cigars, slammed the boxes into the case and locked them up.

"I warned you about tobacco."

"I know it."

"You should have told me."

"I know that, too, but I didn't want you to lecture me."

"A lecture would have been better than waiting here in this barn for three hours."

"Three hours?" despondently.

"Oh, there's a restaurant, but it's not much better than this. It's bad—flies and greasy plates."

And by the time they had found the Ristorante Tornaghi—miserable and uninviting—they were laughing.

"Only I wish I knew where they were going," was Hillard's regret.

"They?" said Merrihew.

"Yes. The woman with Kitty is the woman I'm going to find if I stay in Europe ten years. And when I find her I'm going to marry her."

"Sounds good," said Merrihew, pouring himself a third glass of very indifferent Beaune.

"And they may be going anywhere but to Monte Carlo—Paris, Cherbourg, Calais. In my opinion, Monte Carlo is the last place two such women are likely to go to alone."

So they sat in the dingy restaurant, smoking and laughing and grumbling till the next train was announced. At 4 that afternoon they arrived without further mishap at the most interesting station of its size in Europe, Monte Carlo.

And then into the omnibus adjoining came the man with the scar.

* * * * * * *

The Riviera, from San Remo on the Italian side to Cannes on the French, possesses a singular beauty.

Villefranche stands above Nice, between that white city and Monte Carlo. It is quiet and lovely. For this reason the great army of tourists pass it by. There is no casino, no band, no streets full of tantalizing shops. On the very western limit of Villefranche, on the winding white road which rises out of Nice, is a modest little villa, so modest that a ballerina would scorn it and a duchess ignore it.

In the balcony La Signorina reposed in a steamer chair, gazing seaward. The awning cast a warm glow as of gold upon her face and hair, a transparent shadow. She was at this moment the most precious thing upon which the eye may look, a wholly beautiful woman. Kitty Killigrew, standing in the casement window, stared at her silently, not without some envy, not without some awe. What was going on behind those dreamy eyes?

"Hilda?" said Kitty.

"Yes, Kitty."

"Who and what are you?" Kitty asked bravely.

La Signorina's eyes wandered till they met Kitty's.

"And what good would it do you to know? Would it bring money from home any sooner? You already know that I am unhappy. The adventuress always is."

"Adventuress?" Kitty laughed scornfully. "The proprietor pretends he does not know you, but I am certain he does. He forgets himself sometimes in the way he bows to you."

La Signorina turned again in a passion fierce and sudden.

Kitty paused, then asked:

"Won't you tell me what the secret is?"

"How beautiful that white sail looks!"

"You know all about me," went on Kitty stubbornly.

"Because you told me. I never asked you a single question."

"Is it—love?"

"Love!" La Signorina shrugged. "Poor Kitty, you are trying in vain to make a romance out of my life. You should not read so much."

"[illegible]," declared Kitty. "It is because I love you and because it makes me sad when I hear you laugh, when I see you beat your hands against the chair as you did just now."

La Signorina turned again in a passion which was as fierce as it was sudden.

"There is a man," she hissed, her eyes dilating. "But I loathe him, I hate him, I abhor him! And were it not wicked to kill he would have been dead long ago. Enough! If you ever ask another question I will leave you."

"I am sorry," said Kitty. "He was false to you and broke your heart."

"No, Kitty, only my pride."

"It is a strange world," mused Kitty. "Let us turn to our affairs. I received a letter today."

"From home?" eagerly.

"I have no home, Kitty. The letter is from a friend in Naples. Mr. Hillard and Mr. Merrihew, friends of yours, are in Italy."

Kitty could scarcely believe her ears. "Where are they? Where are they stopping?"

"That I do not know. But listen. They have started out to find us. When I tell you that Mr. Hillard is the gentleman I dined with that night before we sailed you will understand my reasons for wishing to avoid him. From this time on we must never appear on the streets without our veils. If by chance we meet them we must give no sign. It will be only for a little while. Your letter will come soon, and you may renew your acquaintance with these two gentlemen when you return home. It may be hard for you, but if you wish to stay with me my will must be a law unto you."

"Not to speak to them if we meet them?" urged Kitty in dismay. "But that is cruel of you. They are both gentlemen."

"I do not know Mr. Merrihew, but I can say that Mr. Hillard is a gentleman. As for being cruel, I am not; only selfish."

"Are you not a queen who has run away from a kingdom?" asked Kitty bitterly. "One reads about them every day in the papers."

"My dear, you are free to choose one of two paths. I shall not urge you one way or the other, but you must choose now."

Several minutes passed. Kitty looked out to sea, and La Signorina closed her eyes. In her heart Kitty knew that she could no more leave this woman than she could fly. She was held by curiosity, by sentiment, by the romantic mystery.

"I have chosen," she said at length. "I shall stay with you."

"Thanks, Kitty. And now the affairs of the company. We have played three days and have lost steadily. Tonight will be the last chance. Win or lose, tomorrow we shall return to Venice. I do not like the idea of going to Monte Carlo at night. It is not exactly safe. But since beggars mustn't be choosers we must go. Again I warn you to speak to no one while I am playing and under no circumstances raise your veil. They have begun to notice us, but it will end tonight. I was mad to think that I could win. And, by the way, Kitty, we shall not go back to the Campo Formosa."

Kitty accepted this news brightly. If there was one place she hated it was the Campo.

"Now run and dress," advised La Signorina. "Let me dream a little more while the sun sets."

She knew men tolerably well. After thirty they cease to follow visions—they seek tangible things. No, they must never meet again. It would not be wise. Her heart, galled by disillusion, might not withstand much storming. And she had no wish to add this irretrievable folly to the original blunder. She was afraid.

No; they must go their separate ways till the end. With a sigh she rose and went into the room. Kitty was busy with the finishing touches of her toilet. The older woman kissed her fondly.

"And do you realize that you are the most beautiful woman in the world?" asked Kitty.

"Little flatterer!"

"And if I were a man"—Kitty paused—"I'd fall in love with you and marry you."

La Signorina looked into the mirror.

CHAPTER XII.

GRAY VEILS.

THE fascination of Monte Carlo is not to be described—it must be seen. Vice shall be attractive, says the mother of Satan. At Monte Carlo it is more than attractive; it is compelling. A subtle hypnotism prevails, the lure of gold. Fool and rogue, saint and sinner, here they meet and mingle and change. To those who give Monte Carlo but a trifling glance, toss a coin or two on the tables and leave by the morrow's train it has no real significance. It is simply one of the sights of Europe.

To this latter class belonged the two young men. They had no fortunes to retrieve, no dishonesty to hide, no restitutions to make, no dancers to clothe and house. It was but a mild flirtation.

They had searched Nice and Monaco and Mentone, but the women they sought were not to be found. They decided, therefore, that the women had gone on to Paris.

"My system needs a tonic," said Merrihew.

"We'll hold the funeral after tonight's play. Of all the damfool games it's roulette."

"And I can prove it," Merrihew replied. "I have just $50 left." He took out the gold and toyed with it. "Can't you hear it?" he asked.

"Hear what?"

"The swan song of these tender napoleons."

Merrihew had played the numbers, the dozens, the columns, the colors, odd and even. Sometimes he would win a little, but a moment later the relentless rake would drag it back to the bank.

"Nature has done this very prettily. Quite clever with her colors, don't you know," he drawled, plucking the down on his upper lip, for he was trying to raise a mustache, convinced that two waxed points of hair at each corner of his mouth would impress the hotel waiters and other facchini—baseborn.

"Don't be a jackass!" Hillard was out of sorts.

"You agreed with me that I was one. Why not let me make a finished product?" good humoredly.

"Well," Merrihew finally said, "you might as well let me have my letter of credit now."

"You will not set eyes upon it till we return to Genoa. That's final. I know you, my boy, and I know Monte Carlo. Even with your fifty, a watch and a ring I'm afraid to trust you out of sight."

"I can see that you will never forgive nor forget those bad cigars. Come on. We'll take a look at our Italian friend. He's a bad loser. I have seen him lose his temper too. It's my opinion that he's a desperate man."

"They usually are when they come to Monte Carlo."

So they walked round to the entrance to the gaming halls, where the lights, the gowns, the jewels, the sparkling eyes, the natural beauty and the beauty of enamel, the vague perfumes, the low murmur of voices, the soft rustle of silks, the music of ringing gold, all combine to produce a picture as beautiful as a mirage and as false. They joined the never ending procession which passes in and out of the swinging doors day after day, year after year.

"There's the chap with the scar. He is a handsome beggar," Hillard admitted. "I wonder what sort of blackleg he is. He's no ordinary one, I'm certain. I begin to recognize the face of the man with him. He's a distinguished diplomat."

WERE COUSINS BUT WERE NOT AWARE OF IT

Rev. Dr. Langford, of Toronto, who is filling the pulpit at Charlotte street church in the absence of Rev. G. W. Henderson, and Mr. William Langford, the local contractor, have been first cousins for a good many years, and neither one knew it until very recently.

Dr. Morrison introduced the two gentlemen at the church, and although Mr. Wm. Langford suspected some relationship, he was not sure of any and Dr. Langford didn't think he had any relatives in this part of the country.

In the course of the conversation, however, it transpired the discovery was made that the fathers of the Messrs. Langford were brothers,

WHAT TIME IS IT?

The Dumb Watch at the Post Office Refuses to Answer the Question

The post office clock has worn out the patience of the citizens altogether.

The clock is not for the purpose of drawing attention to where the post office stands for letting the public know what time it is.

When one looks at the clock it gives the time as 9.30, no matter what time of day it is, and while the dumb watch antics of Peterborough's Big Ben was only the source of humorous comment when it first failed to register the passing minutes, it has become a source of real annoyance and much inconvenience.

The question is when is the clock going to be repaired?

POWER WAS HIS HOBBY

The Timely Topics column of the Cobourg Sentinel Star prints the following under the heading, "A Sincere Organizer." Mr. Culverwell's friends are cognizant of his work and are giving him well deserved commendation:—

"On Tuesday a rather unique meeting was held, as far as this part of the country is concerned, when the Northumberland-Durham Power Co., and the Culverwell Trent River Syndicates held their final meeting, and successfully wound up its business, and proved that a promoter could and would make good.

Mr. J. A. Culverwell, the promoter, engineer and Managing Director of the Company, has for the years we have known him, and for years before, been enthusiastic in his advocacy of power at Trent River. He has been so earnest and so decidedly enthusiastic that he has rushed his friends into the enterprises even against their wishes, and not only that, but he put every penny he could raise himself into the enterprises.

He has been certainly one of the most courageous, enterprising and generous men we have known. He interested capitalists in Toronto and Montreal, and men of smaller capital in this Eastern District. Power was his hobby; it was his politics and we might say his religion, for he believed in it, and no man is sincere is he does not believe in what he advocates.

Well, this meeting was held. It was large, it was representative, it was enthusiastic. Every speaker in his own peculiar language spoke of the courage, the pertinacity, the honesty of Mr. Culverwell, the man who fought against all odds, friends and enemies, and secured thousands of dollars and thousands of his own, which he threw into one pot, and when it accomplished its purpose and he made good, he dealt honorably and generously with all who entered into the partnership with them.

Men are generally selfish, they grasp after money that is within their reach, but Mr. Culverwell, when success came, and he was in a position to show his calibre, was true to his record, and generous and honorable with his associates and friends. It was a unique meeting, the reason for its call was unique, and it proved that the central figure in connection with it was unique, and a man who made power his life work, at the critical time, made good.

SIX MONTHS

In a Spot Quiet and Cool He Will Rest---He Stole

Edward Carpenter, accused of three charges of theft, was sentenced this morning by Magistrate Dumble to six months in Central Prison.

The evidence submitted was largely the same as what was given on his previous appearance in court to answer to the same charges and the facts have already been related. Three charges were laid against him, namely, that of stealing a skiff, the property of William Quinn; of taking some launch fittings, including high tension wire, a launch tarpaulin and other articles belonging to Alfred Jackson, and lastly, of scuttling a launch owned by Roland Wilson and taking the engine from it.

The prisoner was defended by Mr. G. N. Gordon, while Crown Attorney R. E. Wood appeared for the prosecution.

POLICEMAN TESTIFIES

Officer Newhall was the first witness. He said; "On August 1st I had a search warrant issued at the instance of Roland Wilson to search the premises of the accused, and I found there some high tension wire and a launch waterproof cover, and several other gasoline launch fittings. Prisoner said he obtained them from Arthur Rawlings, of Chemong. A little later he confessed that he was silly enough to take them."

Mr. G. N. Gordon then cross-examined witness.

Mr. Roland Wilson was next called to the witness box.

He said he was present when prisoner's house was searched. They found the engine and fittings, which he identified as his own, and stolen from his launch which had been scuttled by prisoner in twenty feet of water.

Alfred Jackson was also present at the time and identified some of his property there.

The prisoner elected to be tried summarily. He pleaded guilty to stealing a skiff from William Quinn only.

Mr. G. N. Gordon stated that he had no evidence to offer that would affect prisoner. He made a short plea for leniency on the part of the magistrate when passing sentence upon the accused.

WOULD PAY UP.

He was only twenty-six years of age, and had never appeared in a court before, either as witness or prisoner. He was a boat-builder by trade and would be glad to pay for all the articles stolen, and would report to the chief of police regularly.

HAD BROKEN FAITH.

His Worship, in passing judgment, said the prisoner had forfeited all claim to leniency by repeating an offence after writing a letter of repentance to him (the magistrate) for stealing the first time. He also had broken faith with the boat-building profession in general by not protecting boats which must necessarily be exposed along the water's edge. He therefore, imposed the sentence of six months for the three charges, the sentence to be concurrent.

SOLD INTERESTS FOR $230,000 MAKING PROFIT OF $200,000; CULVERWELL'S BIG COUP

Mr. J. A. Culverwell has sold all the interests on the Trent Waterway with which he was identified, with the exception of Burleigh Falls and Buckhorn.

The price realized by the sales was $230,000, a clear gain of about $200,000 on the original figure paid.

Mr. Culverwell secured properties which it was necessary to obtain in order to carry on the work of development, and was able to sell them at a high price.

JOLTED FROM C. P. R. TRAIN PICKED UP BESIDE THE TRACK RUSHED TO THE HOSPITAL

A middle-aged man wearing a light suit, with head bandaged and in an unconscious condition, was picked up beside the C.P.R. tracks near Cavanville, eleven miles west of here last night and brought in to Peterborough on a hand-car at seven o'clock this morning.

As far as can be learned the man was a passanger on the C.P.R. midnight train, and was probably standing on the platform between the coaches when a sudden jolt or turn pitched him off. His absence was discovered when near Peterborough and instructions wired to the section men at Caanville to endeavor to find him.

He was found lying unconscious beside the track by a couple of the searchers with blood and sand clotted on his face and head, and was brought to Peterborough on a hand-car, with all possible speed. Here Comstock's ambulance was waiting for him and he was rushed to Nicholls Hospital and Dr. Young, the C.P.R. physician, rendered medical aid.

This morning he recovered consciousness for a brief interval and Dr. Young learned that his name was S. Clarke and that his home was in Ottawa. The doctor stated that his condition was slightly improved, but was unable to say how serious his injuries were. No bones were broken, but he may be injured internally.

AT 3.30.

Mr. Clark had recovered consciousness, but the extent of his injuries was not known.

BOOZE-FEST ECHOES OR THE MORNING AFTER

Four drunk and disorderly cases composed the prelude to the Carpenter trial this morning at police court.

For trespassing and drinking beer from a keg on the property of the Peterborough Lumber Company on on Sunday afternoon, one young man was given ten days, in which to pay a fine of $7.60.

A slight mix-up occurred between one of Gibbs and Company's drivers and a couple of young men at the [illegible]. One of the young men will pay over $7.60 in ten days and the other was discharged.

An Englishman, hailing from Liverpool, who has been working at Nixon's hotel, was found laying in the carter's shed under the influence of liquor. As it was his first offence he was discharged.

Charlotte Street Church Epworth League held their regular meeting last evening in the school room. It was of a literary nature, the subject of study being the life of Fanny Crosby, the celebrated hymn writer. There was a fair attendance, and Mr. Gray presided.

After the usual opening exercises had been performed a paper was read by Mr. H. Sandiford, dealing with a portion of her history. This was followed by a vocal solo by Mr. Lee, which was well received.

Miss Pethick next read a fine paper, dealing with the remainder of Miss Crosby's life and work, and showing this famous writer's ability and genius as a writer of hymns that can never be worn out or forgotten.

The last paper of the evening was read by Miss Letitia Elliott on the "Life of Helen Keller." Miss Elliott vividly described the life and work of this heroic, blind and dumb woman, who, despite her physical infirmities, worked her way through college, and whose writings will endure.

SPORTING NEWS

BELLEVILLE PICKS AND T. A. S. NINE

Will Hold the Boards at Riverside Park on Saturday—Hopkins Will be in the Box for Belleville—A Red Hot Battle Anticipated.

Baseball fans will be given something really live to discuss this week, and also to witness on Saturday afternoon.

Since the decisive defeat of the West Ends by the T.A.S. baseball enthusiasm seems to have taken a sudden drop, but the news that a picked team from the five City League teams of Belleville will be here for Saturday afternoon, itching to take the measure of the renowned T.A.S., has set all baseball followers agog with enthusiasm and anticipation.

Hopkins, the famous pitcher of the Belleville team, will be in the box. It will be remembered that this twirler delivered the goods for Lindsay when they played the T.A.S. here last Labor Day.

Some idea of the classy ball which the visitors play may be gleamed from the fact that in a seventeen innings game between the Grand Trunk and the Belleville Park Nines the score at the finish was only 5—4.

More particulars of the game will appear during the week, and judging from present indications it is a sure thing that a record crowd will be on hand when these teams clash.

If the T.A.S. hand out the same fine brand of baseball as they did on the memorable day of the defeat of the Wes tEnds, it will certainly take some very fast work on the part of the visitors to annex the big end of the score.

BEAST AND BIRD AS RECORD-BREAKERS

A trotting horse on Friday covered a mile in 1 minute 58 3-4 seconds, a faster rate of progress than was ever betained by a trotting horse, unless protected by the contrivance known as a windshield. The public, apart from lovers of horses and horse races, is always interested in speed records, whether made by man or beast or mechanism. It is the speed of the aeroplane that fascinates; it is the speed of the sewing machine that made it one of the wonders of the age. Indeed, this continued craving for more speed is at the bottom of much of the world's progress, and in view of Uhlan's great mile, it may not be altogether unprofitable to compare his performance and that of some other horses to the speed of other animals.

TROTTING, PACING, GALLOPING.

The four natural paces for a horse, and indeed for most other quadrupeds, are the walk, trot, pace and gallop. Other paces have been taught horses for the convenience of riders, but they are all combinations or modifications of some of these four. The three first named gaits are natural only when great speed is not required. Every quadruped gallops naturally when extending itself to the utmost. The pace and the trot are artificial except for low speed. It is to be expected, therefore, that horses trained for top speed at the natural gait, the gallop, will go faster than horses trained to trot and pace at top speed. From the fact that the champion pacer is some three seconds faster than the champion trotter, it would be inferred that it is somewhat easier or more natural for a horse to pace fast than to trot fast.

CAIMAN AND MASTER WILLIE.

The difference between a natural and an artificial gait is very apparent when we compare Uhlan's mile with that of Caiman, an English thoroughbred. This horse galloped a mile in 1 minute 33 1-5 seconds in 1900. It took Uhlan 118 3-4 seconds to cover 1,760 yards, while Caiman "turned the trick" in 93 1-5. In fact any mature thoroughbred, not actually a cripple, can cover a mile much faster than the best trotter or pacer. In 1091 an English horse called Master Willie, galloped three-quarters of a mile at a rate of 89 1-2 seconds, a rate of about 45 miles an hour, as compared with the 30 miles an hour of the best trotter or pacer. Alas, then, for Uhlan and Dan Patch! They are hopelessly outclassed by hundred-dollar "skates" at the Woodbine.

THE SPEED OF BIRDS.

Nevertheless, while the thoroughbred is a mere snail compared with at least one biped, and most birds of the air. The ostrich is credited with being able to run a mile a minute, but his wings are of great assistance to him, and shorn of them he might not be able to outdistance the horse. The hawk flies 150 miles an hour, while the elderduck hustles through space at the rate of 90 miles an hour, covering just two feet for every foot covered by the fastest running horse. Moreover, while no horse can travel at top speed for a full mile, these birds can travel hundreds of miles at their best pace and the frigate bird will travel a thousand miles at a rate of speed that no automobile could attain for a furlong.

SPEED OF HARE AND HOUNDS.

Among quadrupeds, the thoroughbred is a rather easy first, followed, as far as we are aware, by the greyhound, who galloped at the rate of 34 miles an hour. The prong-horned antelope is credited with a mile in two minutes, and is probably the fleetest of wild quadrupeds. The old idea about an antelope, a jack rabbit or a kangaroo being faster than a greyhound is fallacious, although the mere fact that a pack of fox hounds will run down a fox is not evidence of greater speed. It is stamina in which the hounds excel the fox, for while a fox can get over a mile in 2 minutes and 18 seconds, the best foxhound pace is about 2.40.

THE ELEPHANT'S GAIT.

A curious race held in Brooklyn a few years ago, indicated that an elephant's speed, for a fraction of a mile, was at the rate of 20 miles an hour. A mile a minute has been accomplished by aeroplanes, and a speed of more than two miles a minute is credited to motor cars. A man's best speed at 100 yards is at the rate of about 20 miles an hour; and no doubt this comparative slowness was partly responsible for the cultivation of compensating speed in domestic animals. Had man been able to run as fast as a horse, there would have been much less reason for the pains taken to develop speed in the horse, of which Uhlan's mile at Cleveland on Friday was such a wonderful demonstration. — The Toronto Mail.

Scarboro Beach

Visitors to the Toronto Exhibition this year cannot afford to leave Scarboro Beack Park out of their plans. This $600,000 amusement resort, modelled after Dreamland and Luna Park, the world-famous institutions, at Coney Island, is the finest of its kind outside of New York itself, and has been visited by millions of delighted patrons in the four years that it has been in existence. Its permanent structures include a scenic railway, a quarter of a mile long, a chute-the-chutes, 800 feet in length, and an underground watertrip called the Cascades, which furnishes an unforgetable experience. In addition there are the Streets of Cairo, Human Butterfly, House of Nonsense, Electroscope Theatre, Johnstown Flood, Aerial Swings, Caroussel, Midway, Bumps, Laughing Gallery and many other novelties which are renewed each season. There will be special fireworks and sports for the Exhibition visitors. The Sunday afternoon and evening free band concerts at the park are a popular feature.

KEENE

Special to the Review.

Keene, Aug. 15.—Mr. Andrew Shearer, secretary of the Otonabee Agricultural Society, has been notified by the Department of Agriculture of the winners of the prizes in the society's field crop competition. The subject of the competition was White Oats and there were about fifteen entries. The crops were judged by an expert judge appointed by the department.

The following is the list of the prize winners. First, Ralph E. Drummond; second, W. W. Shearer; third, Ed. Weir, F. A. Eason and Peter Drummond; fourth, [illegible] Drummond; fifth, John H. Fife. Commended, Fred Speirs.

The prize money, which totals fifty dollars, is supposed to be divided into five prizes, as follows;—First, fifteen dollars; second, twelve dollars; third, ten dollars; fourth, eight dollars, and fifth, five dollars. But, as three contestants are awarded third place, the secretary is in doubt as to how the prize money will be awarded. Mr. Shearer has written to the department under the control of which the competition is conducted, asking how the money must be divided.

The winners of the first, second and third prizes are eligible to compete in the Sheaf Grain competition at Toronto and Ottawa fairs and in the Seed Grain competition at Ottawa winter fair.

Since this competition was commenced by the society several years ago, a great deal of interest has been taken in it by the members and there has always been keen competition. In the past years also, several of the winners have exhibited at Toronto and Ottawa and have been successful in winning prizes there.

Give the Family Income a Chance

Perhaps the family income is big enough after all.

Perhaps the reason it does not seem to go as far as it should is because you do not spend it thriftly enough.

Perhaps when you buy, you do not go to the right stores at the right time.

If you read the store advertisements regularly you will soon see ways of stretching your dollars.

You will soon learn where to go for this and where to buy that.

You will soon be giving your "expense money" a chance to buy you the things you now need and other things that a little surplus money might make you think you need—

But which you cannot now afford.

THE AUTOMOBILE

From "Annual Crop and Business Report" of the Continental and Commercial National Bank of Chicago--State of Crops

The automobile looms up in this correspondence as one of the issues of the day. The growth of the industry is one of the phenomenal developments of the time and could have occured only in a time of great general prosperity and when the surplus earnings of the people as compared with former times were very large. At any period prior to ten years ago, the expenditures of the last year upon automobiles would have been inconceivable. There is an overwhelming volume of opinion that even now this enormous outlay is an extravagance which the country can ill afford; that it is affecting other lines of trade unfavorably, and has been an important factor in the stringent monetary situation of the present year. The industrial and social progress of people is based upon the accumulation of capital, for which there is a never ending demand to finance the new inventions and enterprises which the brain of man is constantly planning. With capital increasng faster than population there is bound to be rapid improvement in the condition of the masses. [illegible] capital pressing for investment, the demand for labor slackens and industry stagnates.

A VALUABLE UTILITY

The paralysis of the bond market in 1910, and the low price of first-class issues shows a scarcity of money seeking investment, and indicates that we are not accumulating capital for our needs.

On the other hand the friends of the automobile claim, undoubtedly with some warrant, that it is not a mere toy or luxury, but a valuable utility; that it is a great time-saver to the busy man and that its influence upon the public health is important.

The prevailing opinion is expressed by a manufacturer of clothing, who writes as follows:

"We know a number of cases where dealers (customers of ours) have asked former clients "Why have not we sold you any clothing this season?" The answer was, "We bought an automobile, and have to economize in every other direction." Furthermore, the army of mechanics, a great many of whom are employed in the manufacturing of automobiles, have joined the ranks of food consumers instead of food producers, as a great many of these mechanics are country lads; also the chauffeur—a great many of these come from the country, and this is in a measure responsible for high prices of food stuffs."

And the argument is effectively stated by another as follows:

"We believe that thousands of people are buying automobiles who have no business to, the great trouble being in figuring whether they can or cannot afford the machine; they do not figure on depreciation. For instance, salaried men getting $2,500 a year may figure that they can afford to buy a $1,200 machine on the installment plan, because the upkeep, including repairs, gasoline, etc., is but a small amount per month, but he fails to figure that in four years his $1,2200 machine will not be worth over $400. The machine has hereby sustained a depreciation of $2200 a year, which alone is nearly 10 per cent of the salary of the man in question. Then too, the upkeep in tires is double what it was two years ago. The advance in tires in the last fifteen months has been something enormous, and there is just now going into effect another very large advance. The masses of the people who are buying the medium priced machines, have not yet wakened to these two vitals facts, viz: the enormous increase in cost of tire upkeep, and the annual depreciation of the machine."

'A FEVER'

On the other hand an Iowa merchant takes a more tolerant view as follows:

"The 'fever' to posess autos applies to the farmer, but he is buying it for the young man and young daughter at home, to keep them there, and it is going to help do it. I seem to see in this large movement to check the farmer boy from leaving the farm, and it is the best movement that can be inaugurated to-day. Of course we know of cases where the choice was made between an auto and a house improvement and where the auto got the call. The building project merely waits for the time being and I do not feel that the country suffers like it might where the case was between an auto and the necessities. In other words I do not think that there are multiplied cases of persons buying autos who can ill afford them, at least not in our section of the country."

THE MAKER'S ARGUMENT

And the automobile manufacturer's argument is presented as follows:

The industry is based upon an absolutely sound, economic demand. As a result of the great activity in the automobile industry, there was not only an apparent [illegible] actual recovery from the panic of 1907, earlier than might ordinarily have been expected. Persons who have studied the conditions [illegible] that if it had not been for the automobile industry, the general business of the country to-day, compared to the panic of 19007, would be in about the same condition as the general business of the country in 1896, as compared with the panic of 1893. For a number of years the country has been absorbing in the neighborhood of a million horse-drawn vehicles annually, which includes vehicle for passenger, freight and agricultural purposes. Every single owner of a horse-drawn vehicle of the simplest and cheapest type, will be an actual ultimate buyer of a motor-driven vehicle. Even though the motor vehicle may cost more than the horse-drawn vehicle, the increased efficiency, in the way of health and activity of the owner of the motor-driven vehicle, will more than offset the increase in cost of the motor vehicle. In view of the manifest sound, economic basis of the motor vehicle industry, it seems incomprehensible that certain gentlemen, otherwise intelligent, should be so short-sighted as to attempt to "kill the goose that laid the golden egg," or to "look a gift horse in the mouth." This is a rapidly moving age, and inside of ten years from this date the present critics of the motor vehicle will be classed in the same category as the farm laborers who opposed the reaping machine, and the legisgators who ridiculed the telegraph and other great inventions.

Wm. Pilfrey, farmer, of Strathroy, shot himself in the breast Friday, but will recover.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux leaves next week for England to discuss a plan for control of cable rates.

For the Children

A French Poodle Acts as Chauffeur.

The dog members of the Curly Poodle club held an "at home" recently. The miniature motor shown in the picture was a feature of the occasion, with the French poodle Olga, a prize member of the club, acting as chauffeur.

He was a funny looking dog with his tiny beady eyes covered with automobile glasses and his body wrapped in a blanket.

A School For Cats.

"Let's play school," meowed Tabby.

"Yes, let's," answered the others. So they made Tabby teacher, and the fun began. The cats simply wouldn't sit still, and then Farmer Jones' big, fat, juicy chickens kept running up and down, peeping in at the barn door.

"Um, how I'd relish a chicken pie!" whispered Ted to Malty. "Shall we bag school and help ourselves outside?"

"After awhile. We'll watch our chance," replied Malty.

The lesson on the blackboard was "how to catch mice and eat them properly." All was going well until a robin flew into the barn and perched itself saucily on a rafter.

"Meow!" cried Malty. "I want it."

"Meow!" said Ted. "I'm hungry too."

"Silence!" shouted Miss Tabby. "Flossy, leave the room for misconduct."

In a little while, just as Malty and Ted were planning their escape, Flossy came in, carrying a big fat mouse in her mouth.

Presto, change! The schoolroom was transformed into a dining room. Away went books and slates and pencils! Over went benches and desks! On to the mouse went the cats, and in less time than it takes to say "Jack Robinson" poor mouse was a thing of the past.

About Horseshoes.

Horseshoes are lucky hung up over a door because they keep the devil out of the house. It happened in this way: Good St. Dunstan was a famous blacksmith, and the king of evil, who used to travel around the world in person before he became so busy, stopped at the saint's forge one day and asked the blacksmith to put a shoe on his hoof. St. Dunstan knew the person he had to handle. He took the ropes that he used to tie horses with and bound the devil so tightly that that gentleman could not move. Then the saint set to work. The devil roared and screamed as St. Dunstan put a redhot iron shoe over the hoof and pounded it in with long nails. He pleaded with his captor [illegible] promising anything in return.

"If I let you go," said St. Dunstan, "will you promise never to enter a house that has a horseshoe nailed over the door?"

"On my honor as a gentleman I promise," said the devil solemnly, and then St. Dunstan let him go. And from that day to this, so they say, the devil has never entered a house so protected.—Chicago News.

The Scarecrow Game.

A straw figure, completely dressed, is fastened to a tree in such a way that it hangs about a foot from the ground. He must have one arm fastened akimbo to his side and the other hanging free. After the players have had their eyes bandaged and been furnished with a stick the game begins. The object is to thrust the stick through the opening made by the arm which is fastened akimbo. Whoever succeeds in doing so may claim a prize. Of course it often happens that the player misses and receives a light pat for clumsiness from the straw man's hanging arm. If any player misses the goal and passes the naughty straw man the bandage is removed and the player is considered out of the game.

Conundrums.

Why is wit like a Japanese lady's foot? Because brevity is the sole of it.

Why are parliamentary reports called "blue books?" Because they are never re(a)d.

Why is it useless to expect a pretty girl to be candid? Because she cannot be plain.

Why is a well trained horse like a benevolent man? Because he stops at the sound of whoa (woe).

Why is your nose in the middle of your face? Because it is the scenter.

The Stars We Can See.

According to the best astronomers, the number of stars that can be seen by a person of average eyesight is about 7,000. The number visible through the telescope has been estimated to be between 75,000,000 and 80,000,000.

Seven insane persons are in London, Ont., county jail, awaiting removal to the Hospital for Insane.

NOT WHAT IT'S CRACKED UP TO BE.

Oh pity, sir, the man who lives
In this progressive age,
When ev'ry hour sees science write
Some deed on hist'ry's page.

There was a time, when, unperturbed,
He took his quiet way;
Nor wotted not of hate and strife
From peaceful day to day.

But with the date that sharply marked
A greater progress' dawn
All ended were the homely joys,
The simple life was gone.

No more within the city is
It safe his way to take;
And for emergencies he must
Provision always make.

With motor cycles, auto cars,
And aeroplanes on high,
What chances of rich longevity
Have timid passers-by?

With all the murk, the bustle, and
Chaos of awful sound;
It looks as though the place to live
Is underneath the ground.

SIGN OF THE GOLDEN LION

WHY, THE KING IS HUMAN

(The following is a digest of an article entitled "King George the Fifth," written by Mr. Brooks, for the August McClures.—Editor.)

BY SIDNEY BROOKS.

England is looking for the man behind George V., but she has yet to find him. It has come upon Englishmen with almost a shock to realize how little they know of the sovereign who has been called to reign over them.

When it came to dealing with King George as a man, the London journals presented to the world a sort of a paragon in wax, a monster of hum-drum respectability, a desiccated effigy of the conventional qualities, talents and graces, a dehumanized dummy of decorous commonplace, a constitutional automatum, a rigid pattern-plate of the properties.

Such a picture bears no more resemblance to King George as I have heard him described by those who really know him than it bears to Mr. Roosevelt.

Let me recall the outward aspects and incidents of his life.

Prince George was doubly fortunate. Not only was he a younger son, and so with comparative liberty to follow his own tastes, but his tastes led him to the most wholesome and bracing vocation that an English prince could possibly adopt.

King Edward was a believer in the virtues of "cockpit education." He was determined if his sons showed any liking for the sea, to place on board the Britannia. The two princes joined her at the same moment. No indulgences were allowed the except separate cabins. Prince George took to the life readily and easily. The two years he spent on board ship confirmed his liking for a sailor's life.

A catalogue of journeys and places is hardly a sketch of a man's personality. Still it is worth noting that before he was twenty years old Prince George had seen more of the outside world than most men see in a lifetime.

A [illegible] miss a morbid, sense of duty is one of the qualities King George owes to, or was at any rate confirmed by, his naval training. He is one of the most conscientious men living.

"There simply is not an ounce of wickedness in him," remarked to me one who observed the new sovereign at close range.

The king is a thoroughly human man, with pronounced traits and plenty of opinions of his own. King George has no more hesitation than Mr. Roosevelt in saying out precisely what he thinks. He is a straightforward, downright style of man, rather naive and immature, bluff and voluble of speech, with an element of emotionalism that, unlike most Englishmen, he is at no pains to conceal.

England does not know the King. Does the King know England? Has he that instinct for divining the silent thoughts and wishes of the nation that King Edward showed to perfection? Has he inherited his father's royal gift for doing the right thing at the right moment in the right way? I do not know; I doubt whether anybody knws.

But, if he relies upon his own sound instincts and goes straight ahead, all will be well. He may never be as popular as King Edward, but he will be assured of the respect, confidence and devotion that are never likely to be withheld by Englishmen from a king who means so thoroughly well as this one does, whose sense of responsibility is so static, and who will gladly wear himself to the bone in doing his duty.

READS LIKE A ROMANCE

Nearly everyone who rides on the Union Pacific or Rock Island trains west of Kansas City has noticed a big brick house just north of the railroad tracks, about half a mile east of Edwardsville, Kan., says a Kansas City letter to the Louisville Herald.

The house sets back from the roadway and up on the side of the bluffs.

There are no trees to hide it, and the house is visible for several miles before one reaches Edwardsville from the east. Coming from the west the bluffs hide the big home until the train is almost even with it.

That house of 22 rooms cost $22,000 and it is owned by a negro, probably the richest in Kansas and one of the richest in the country. He has made it all in Kansas. None of his neighbors know how wealthy J. J. Groves really is. Groves probably knows, but does not tell. He is popularly reputed to be a millionaire.

He owns 523 acres of Kaw Valley land, every acre at least worth $150 and some of it worth nearly double that amount. Within a few days he has refused $30,000 for one 120-acre tract, not including any houses.

This price was a valuation of $250 an acre for this tract and Groves would not sell at that figure. The land pays good interest on a much higher valuation than that.

J. J. Groves was born in slavery in Green county, Kentucky in 1859. Of course, he never realized the trials of the slaves, as his people had been released from this when he was four years of age.

But his former master was a good one and Groves stayed with him until he was 20 years old. Then he went to Kansas. This 20-year-old boy landed in Kansas City with just 75 cents in his pockets.

He walked into what is now Armourdale. This part of Kansas City, Kan., was then farm lands. J. T. Williamson was a farmer there and Groves went to work for him.

At the beginning of the second spring Groves and Williamson made a deal whereby Groves was to work for Williamson for 40 cents a day, but he should have some time of his own. Williamson lent him a team, seed and let him rent 10 acres of ground.

Three acres were planted to sweet potatoes, three to watermelons and the rest to Irish potatoes. Groves was married that year. Both man and wife worked hard, and in two years they had saved enough from their share of the crop of the ten acres to buy a team of mules and a ramshackle old wagon.

Then they moved to west of Edwardsville and rented 60 acres of land. In three years' time Groves and his wife cleared $200 from that 60 acres of land, and then they made the first payment on 80 acres of Kaw valley lands, and later they bought 1,600 acres of Grove county wheat land. The Groves' farms in Wyandotte county included 602 acres until a short time ago, when an 80-acre tract was sold.

LOCKJAW CAN BE CURED

The popular belief that a wound from treading on a rusty nail is very likely to cause tetanus is quite correct. This is not because it is a nail or is rusty, but because by lying on the ground it has become infected with the germs of lockjaw. Moreover, as the punctured wound caused by the nail bleeds but little and this blood dries up and excludes the air, the most favorable conditions for the development of tetanus exist, for, as Kitasato, the Japanese bacteriologist, proved the absence of oxygen is most favorable to the growth of this germ.

A VIRULENT GERM.

The germ itself looks very much like a tack, according to a writer in Harper's Monthly; it is so virulent that its toxin in doses of 1,200,000th of a teaspoonful will kill a mouse. It has been found by experiment that the poison is carried up to the spinal cord, not by the absorbents, but through the motor nerves.

Fortunately an anti-poison or antidote has been developed, but so prompt is the action of the poison that in an animal two minutes after the injection of a fatal dose of the poison twice as much of the remedy is required as if it had been administered with the poison; after eight minutes ten times the amount, and after ninety minutes forty times the original amount is necessary. This antitoxin is entirely harmless.

RESULT OF NEGLECTED WOUNDS.

As a result of antiseptic methods lockjaw is now almost unknown except after neglected wounds, instead of being frequent as it formerly was. When it is feared the antitoxin is used as a preventive and when it is developed as a cure. In animals, for naturally horses suffer enormously more frequently than man, the same antitoxin is used. In 163 horses that had operations performed on them, but were protected by the antitoxin, not one developed tetanus.

THE MILK SUPPLY

THE MILK SUPPLY.

Owen Sound Times.

The Board of Health are looking after the dairymen and on the contention of the Provincial Milk Commission that publicity is the best cure for undesirable conditions, there is no secrecy as to the fact. Some of the milk sellers have not put their premises in proper sanitary condition. Some who have promised to do so have not kept their promises. The result is that Dr. Murray, the medical health officer, has sent out emphatic instructions that the proper conditions must be supplied before the cows are taken in for the fall or the owners will not be allowed to dispose of their milk to the Owen Sound public. The conditions are not serious, but the dairymen must understand that if they wish to do business in Owen Sound they must comply with the regulations. That the Health Department is looking closely after this work is shown that only six cases of typhoid have been reported this season. It was found that in each case the milk supply was obtained from one dealer. Inspector King found that in that particular instance the milkman was getting the water to wash his cans from a spring which to all appearances was giving pure water. This was stopped and samples of the water forwarded to Toronto for analysis. It is significant, however, that since the use of the spring water has been stopped a fortnight ago, not another case has been reported. That the milk vendor was innocent of any thought of unsanitary conditions, is admitted, but it goes to show how careful it is necessary to be in order not to spread disease through milk, or water—or a combination of both.

THE BEST OF THE SEASON

If you wish to thoroughly enjoy yourself, take in the Union Sunday Schools' Excursion, of Peterborough to Kingston and The Thousand Islands. on Saturday, August 27th. Special train leave G. T. R. station 6 a.m. Salvation Army Band will accompany the excursionists. Special train leaves Kingston 10:00 p.m., but tickets are good to return until Monday, the 29th. AN ODE

While the editor of the Review has been waging war on those responsible for certain unsanitary conditions which exist in the city, a staff poet has taken an amusing snap-shot of the situation in the following verses;

FLIES.

The editor sat in his big easy chair,
But he wasn't just taking his ease,
He was grinding his teeth, he was pulling his hair,
And uttering words like these—
Oh! well, never mind what the editor swore,
As fiercely he rolled his eyes,
And above and around him, and on him galore,
Were
flies,
flies,
flies.

There were Mr. and Mrs. Fly first of all,
And children, a hundred score,
And also their progeny, great and small,
And friends from the house next door;
And there was old Hoss Fly from over the way,
And visitors, too, of renown
Who had booked at the Hotel de Garbage that day,
Having heard of this wide-open town.

And you should have heard how those flies talked the while
They rested or flitted around,
Of what they had seen in some places of style,
And where the best victuals were found.
While others, who'd been on a bit of a tear,
And filled up with all kinds of booze,
Proceeded to tackle the man in the chair,
And berate his nonsensical views.

A few on the tanglefoot, warily spread,
Were raising an awful roar,
While wiser ones said, with a shake of the head,
They had seen sticky paper before.
Then all of these sampled the editor's paste,
Declaring with fine disdain,
The stuff wasn't in it for flavor and taste,
With the garbage pile down the lane.

Then view with compassion the editor's plight,
Nor wonder at words he may say,
While poisoned putrescence polluteth the night,
And pestilence crawleth by day,
And ever for "copy" some loud voices call,
With a hook full of proofs to revise,
In grim humor says the old clock on the wall,
flies,
flies,
flies.

HOW TO DEAL WITH THE FLY NUISANCE

(Respectfully Submitted to the Board of Health.)

House flies are now recognized as most serious carriers of the germs of certain diseases such as typhoid fever, tuberculosis, infantile diarrhoea, etc. They infect themselves in filth and decaying substances, and by carrying the germs on their legs and bodies they pollute food, especially milk, with the germs of these and other diseases and of decay.

House flies breed in such decaying and fermenting matter as kitchen refuse and garbage. Garbage receptacles should be kept tightly covered.

All such refuse should be burnt or buried within a few days, but at once if possible. No refuse should be left exposed. If it cannot be disposed of at once it should be sprinkled with chloride of lime.

Where they are used, especially in public places, as hotels, etc., spittoons should be kept clean, as there is very great danger of flies carrying the germs of consumption from unclean spittoons.

Flies should not be allowed to have access to the sick room, especially in the case of infectious disease.

The faces of babies should be carefully screened with muslin.

Flies may be killed by means of a weak solution of formalin or formaldehyde exposed in saucers in the rooms. This is made by adding a tablespoonful of formaldehyde to a pint of water. The burning of pyrethrum in a room is also effective.

House flies indicate the presence of filth in the neighborhood or insanitary conditions.—Fruit Magazine, Vancouver, B.C.

Flies Injure Crops

Much has been written and printed of late about flies as a menace to human health. But not a word has been said about the danger they do to cultivated crops, which, in the country must amount to scores of millions of dollars annually. Nearly all diseases of plants are due to fungi, usually microscopic. Of such character, for example, are the "smuts" of wheat and other grains, the "mildews," the "rusts," and all the long list of fruit "rots" of various kinds. These and ever so many other vegetable maladies are attributed to minute fungi which feed upon the plants.

The fungi in question are distributed in a number of ways, but commonly by flies—that is to say, by the Muscidae and Sarcophagidae, or, in other words, the house fly and its relatives, and the carrion flies. Those insects feed on almost everything imaginable, and, constantly flitting from place to place, are the universal distributors of the "spores" (corresponding to seeds) of all kinds of fungi.

Flies are extremely fond of odors. Some that are horrible to us are most agreeable to them. They are attracted to the cane fields by the smell of fermented sugar, and there feed on the sweet sap. Thus it comes about that spores of the fungi that cause the common diseases of the cane are found in the excreta of flies caught in the cane field. The "pineapple disease" is only one of a number which they are instrumental in distributing.

Another species of cane fungi is of large size—a kind of mushroom. One of its spores, left by a fly on the cane, is washed by rain to the ground, wherein it sprouts. Its vegetation later on produces a curious fruit, which takes the shape of a whitish ball. That is to say, the ball is a sort of case, inside of which the mushroom is tightly placed, like a jack-in-the-box. At daylight the spherical box, which is beneath the surface of the earth, bursts, and within two minutes the mushroom appears above ground, attaining a height of three or four inches.—Technical World Magazine.

SIR JAMES OFF FOR LONDON TO STUDY IMMIGRATION PROBLEMS

Premier of Ontario Will be Away Five or Six Weeks to Visit the London Office—Farm Laborers and Domestic Servants Have Been Specialty of Agency This Year.

Toronto, Aug. 17.—Sir James Whitney leaves this morning for his trip to the old country. He will sail from Montreal on Thursday on the Royal Edward. It is expected that he will be gone for about six weeks or so.

On being asked yesterday regarding his trip to England, Sir James said:

"I leave to-morrow morning and will be away five or six weeks. Some time ago an order-in-council was passed providing that in the future either a Cabinet Minister or the Deputy Minister of Agriculture should visit the Ontario Government Agency, in London, at least once every year with a view to observing the working of our immigration policy and other matters connected therewith.

"During the current year the efforts of the colonization bureau have been chiefly directed towards relieving the demand for farm laborers and domestic servants. We have been much encouraged by the result. Up to the present time about 1,600 farm hands have been distributed throughout the province; this is, of course, aside from the number placed by the Salvation Army and other agencies. It is likewise several times as large a number as has been placed any other year.

"After remaining in Ontario for a few months a number have left on harvest excursions for the west, but this number seems to be less than in previous years. This, of course, is one of the conditions which we have to meet, and just as we have to meet the fact that numbers of our school teachers soon after getting their certificates go to the Northwest to seek larger salaries.

"Outside of other organizations at least 500 domestic servants have been placed so far during the current year."

"The London office has had one of the busiest years in its history. There have been a great number of enquiries as to the investment of monies in Ontario. The official staff has been kept very busy supplying information, not only as to the agricultural resources of the province, but also as to mining, manufacturing and other lines of activity. To such an extent has the work increased, that our London agent expresses the opinion that additional quarters must be secured in order to furnish sufficient accommodation for the work to be done.

"The Minister of Agriculture being unable to leave the province this summer, I am going over in connection with these matters. I will meet Mr. James, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, and also the Minister of Education, shortly after my arrival in London, when we will take up the whole subject, including the suggestion as to additional quarters."

SOME RECORD SHOOTING AT OPENING MATCH OF O.R.A.

The New "Peep Sights" Work Wonders and Possibles Are Scored on Several Occasions—Three Men Tie at 700 Yds. With Eight Bull's-eyes Each.

Long Branch Rifle Ranges, Aug. 17.—Wonders have been accomplished by the "peep" or rear-aperture sight, which is being used at the Ontario Rifle Association matches this season, and Canadian militiamen are to become sharp-shooters indeed. Despite unfavorable weather for high scoring, last year's standard for the first day's shooting was remarkably eclipsed on these ranges yesterday. "Possibles" were ripped off in large quantities in the afternoon over the 500, 600 and 800 yard ranges.

Particularly was this noted in the "extra series" strings. Sergt. G. Mortimer, C.A.S.C., (Ottawa), the Ross Rifle demonstrator; Sergt. W. A. Smith of the Foot Guards (Ottawa), and Sergt. Blackburn of Winnipeg, tied in the extra series at 800 yards, with eight successive bull's-eyes each, being a possible at five shots, and the same with the extra three shots necessary in case of a tie.

Last year's records were shattered in all three matches fired in, namely, The City of Hamilton, Canadian Club and City of Toronto.

Chief executive officer, Major M. S. Mercer, Q.O.R., declared: "Ordinary men are shooting pretty well on a par with the Bisley marksmen. Although there was a strong left variable wind, at times gusty, and with a hazy light throughout the day, the shooting has been high—much higher than in former years—owing to the introduction of the rear aperture sights. A good many men who had practically given up shooting with open sights, have taken it up again and many of them are making 10 points better than they formerly did."

The force of this statement will be noted in a comparison of results in the Canadian Club match between this year and last.

Yesterday three possibles (35 in 7 shots) were scored; last year there were none. Yesterday, eight men made 34's; last year the highest were 34's, and there were only three of these. Yesterday, 68 men got over 31, and anything less than this was counted out of the money; last year, only 47 men scored over 31, 27 scores of 30 were accepted and 10 scores of 29 as well. The three scoring possibles were: Pte. J. M. Jones, 13th (Hamilton), Pte. E. S. McCoy, 13th (Hamilton), and Lance-Corpl. H. Whitehorn, 10th Royal Grenadiers.

The Canadian Club Jubilee Challenge Trophy, valued at $250, was captured by the Governor-General5s Foot Guards of Ottawa. The same team won it last year. Pte. Jones and Lance-Corpl. Whitehorn will divide $25 for making the highest individual scores in team competition.

The 43rd Regiment, D.C.O.R. (Ottawa), won the City of Toronto team match, carrying with it the Ladies' Challenge Cup, valued at $150.

Cadets are making a splendid showing. Three of them figured prominently in the Canadian Club match and 14 in the City of Hamilton match.

TEDDY DEFEATED FOR HEAD OF REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

He is Beaten by New York Politicians When He is Nominated for Chairmanship of the Party Executive in New York State.

New York, Aug. 17—Theodore Roosevelt matched strength with the old guard of the Republican party in New York State yesterday, and met decisive defeat. The Republican state committee, in session here, by a vote of 20 to 15, refused to recommend him for temporary chairman of the state convention which meets at Saratoga on Sept. 27. Instead, Vice-President James S. Sherman was selected.

This is Roosevelt's second defeat at the hands of the old guard, the first having been the Legislature's refusal to pass the Cobb direct primary bill, although Mr. Roosevelt especially endorsed it. With his defeat yesterday, plans for harmony within the party in the state received a severe set-back; and as soon as Mr. Roosevelt heard the news he issued a statement in which he enrolled himself as a progressive, so far as the New York State situation goes. It was his most pointed political statement since his return, and those who saw him were convinced that he had determined to begin an open fight on the old guard. The statement follows:

"To the various persons who asked me whether I would accept the position of temporary chairman of the state convention, I said that I would do so only if they were sure, after knowing my attitude, that they desired me, because my speech would be of such a character that it might help if the convention nominated the right kind of a man, on a clearcut progressive platform; but that it would hurt, if neither the right kind of a man were nominated, nor the right kind of a platform adopted."

Although repudiated yesterday it does not necessarily mean that Roosevelt will not be temporary chairman. The convention delegates themselves will decide who is to open the meeting, and deliver the keynote speech, but the state committee's recommendation of Mr. Sherman for the place served notice on the ex-president and his supporters that the old guard would give him a fight to the end.

In the interval between now and Sept. 27, it is expected that the struggle between the organization and the Roosevelt-Hughes forces will be carried into every corner of the state, and that the chief issue will at the primaries for the election of Roosevelt or anti-Roosevelt delegates to the convention.

Beverley, Mass., Aug. 17.—Beverley was completely upset last night when news came of the defeat of Theodore Roosevelt for temporary chairman of the New York Republican State Convention. The fact that Lloyd C. Griscom had been in conference with President Taft as late as Saturday night and Sunday, added to the sensation that the despatches created.

Senator Crane of Massachusetts, the central figure in the organization plans, was here late yesterday afternoon and spent two hours with the President. He would not discuss his visit, but it is known that he submitted a verbal report to the President of his observations in the west, and what he had learned more recently in New Hampshire and Vermont.

FIRE MAY CAUSE FINANCIAL PANIC

Brussels, Aug. 17.—Business men of Brussels are demanding that an extra session of the Belgium Parliament be called to make provision against a panic following the financial reverse occasioned by Sunday's disastrous fire that almost wiped out the Brussels Universal International Exposition.

The exposition was re-opened yesterday under the most discouraging circumstances. Only a handful of visitors were present, and it is now certain that the enormous crowds that were expected during the latter part of August and September will not materialize. This not only means that the exposition will be conducted at a tremendous loss, but that the merchants and townspeople will get practically no return on the heavy investment they have made. Already thousands of exposition employes have been let out and local labor conditions are in danger of being upset by this army of unemployed.

Parliament will probably be asked to vote a bonus to the promoters of the exposition and to inaugurate government works to provide for those out of employment.

A special commission yesterday began an investigation into the fire.

AN HEIRESS WEDS VIOLINIST

Kingston, Aug. 17.—In 1903 Miss Lola Baldwin, Atlantic City, met in Berlin George Roquboy, Russian violinist. The parents stopped the love-making. Then Miss Baldwin became a rich heiress and searched for the violinist, who had gone to America after making a name in Russia. He, two years ago, became leader of the orchestra at the Hotel Frontenac, Round Island Park, among the Thousand Islands. Last Thursday, Miss Baldwin arrived and accidentally met the violinist and on Friday Miss Baldwin insisted on marriage.

LORD BRASSEY LOVES CANADA

Ottawa, Aug. 17.—"I come to Canada because I love Canada."

With these words Lord Brassey, the distinguished English seaman, famous the world over for his cruises on his beautiful yacht, The Sunbeam, greeted a press representative when he stepped off the train.

His host was waiting at the station for him. Lord Brassey in the afternoon visited the experimental farm and drove through the city, and he left again on the afternoon train for Montreal. Lord Brassey has been called home to England to preside at a meeting of the association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom, of which he is president.

KING ALFONSO TO STAY IN LONDON

London, Aug. 17.—According to the Central News yesterday, King Alfonso of Spain had ordered apartments put in readiness for him and Queen Victoria at the Spanish embassy in London, in anticipation of an indefinite stay in England as a result of the deadlock in the negotiations for a settlement of the dispute between the Spanish Government and the Vatican.

Crooked Work of Jury Panel.

Chicago, Aug. 17.—Declaring from the bench that "crooked work is being done," Judge Kerston yesterday dismissed a panel of 100 veniremen called in the case of Lee O'Neil Browne, who is accused of bribing a legislator to vote for William Lorimer for United States Senator.

MEN WEEP WHEN THE CHIEF DIES

Topeka, Kan., Aug. 17.—A cable from Carlsbad, Austria, announces the death of James Hurley, general manager of the Santa Fe Railway.

Mr. Hurley was 70 year sold, and entered the service of the Santa Fe Railroad Co., as a brakeman 30 years ago.

His death caused much sorrow at the general offices of the company here. Men gathered in groups and wept like children. He was exceedingly popular with the employes of the company.

He never forgot the men who had labored with him.

Shoeworkers Strike.

Salem, Mass., Aug. 17.—A general strike of union employes in the Salem shoe factory was begun yesterday and more than 1,000 workers quit their benches. They demand that several employes, who are alleged to have been locked out, be reinstated.

Must Pay Taxes or,—

Belleville, Aug. 17—The special committee appointed by the City Council to deal with delinquent taxpayers met and instructed the tax collectors to issue warrants against over 500 taxpayers in arrears.

RAIN CHECKS FOREST FIRES

Kenora, Aug. 17.—The first heavy rain since March visited this district Monday night, when the precipitation between eight in the evening and four in the morning amounted to over two inches. It was accompanied by a violent electrical disturbance, which put the power plant out of business for some time and plunged the town in darkness. The rain has quenched the numerous forest fires which have been running unchecked in many localities. A boat brought in word yesterday that the precipitation was general twenty-five miles south, and if it covered a wide area its value to lumbering interests is incalculable.

TO ESTABLISH A FOUNDATION OF $1,000,000

Berlin, Aug. 17.—Sir Ernest Cassel, the English financier, has arranged to establish a foundation of $1,000,000, the income from which is to be used for the benefit of poor Germans seeking employment in England, and poor British subjects seeking work in Germany, who are without money for their support. The new foundation will be in memory of the late King Edward of Great Britain, with whom the financier had been closely associated for many years.

Sir Ernest Cassel, though a British subject, has retained his interest in his native land, Germany. He was born in Cologne, the son of a German banker, in 1852, and, in addition to his English knighthood, he wears the Order of the Crown of Prussia, first-class, one of the highest German decorations.

A LIZARD INSIDE

Brantford, Ont., Aug. 16.—A rare case occurred here to-day. Reginald Duckworth, who has been very ill, during a heavy coughing attack, brought up a three-inch lizard. Local doctors state the case is the second one of its kind reported here. Duckworth is expected to recover rapidly.

PEACE IS PROBABLE

Judge Barron Says Toronto Street Car Men Will Not Spoil Fair.

Toronto, Aug. 17.—"I think that both parties have come so near together that an award may be made that will be acceptable to all parties concerned.

"Mr. Mackenzie is a sensible man, and I believe he will accept the award of the board, which will be made to-morrow night. [illegible] either and they realize what a serious thing it would be to this city if a strike occurred. Why, all business would come to a standstill and, even factories would have to close up."

So said Judge Barron last evening, after a day spent in further negotiation with William Mackenzie, president of the Street Railway Co.; General Manager Fleming, and representatives of the men at which George Gooderham, M.P.P., and president of the Canadian National Exhibition, was present as an urgent advocate of peace.

When it is considered that Judge Barron knows just what the award will be, and that he had discussed all points of the question with those who voice the will of both parties, it amounts to little less than a declaration.

SUICIDE TO EVADE LAW

Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 17.—To escape the law, Bartho Bednarsky, 49, of Buffalo, yesterday afternoon shot and killed his wife and himself in an apartment house here.

Bednarsky recently held up and robbed a man in Buffalo. He was trailed here by his victim, who reached the city about the same time as Bednarsky did yesterday. Finding himself trapped, Bednarsky used his revolver. When the shooting took place, the victim was in the City Hall, swearing out a warrant for Bednarsky's arrest.

"ANGEL OF THE CRIMEA" WILL NOT REST IN ABBEY

London, Aug. 17.—The executors of the will of Miss Florence Nightingale, the "Angel of the Crimea," who died Saturday, definitely declined yesterday the offer of a public burial in Westminster Abbey among the historic great of England. They consider themselves bound by the terms of her will, in which she expressed a wish for a simple private funeral.

An Exciting Election.

Lexington, Ky., Aug. 17.—Word was received here yesterday of a general fight in a school election in Breathitt County, in which Lewis Napier was shot and killed and several others more or less hurt.

AMATEUR SLEUTH MEETS DEATH

Quincy, Mass., Aug. 17.—"Griffin found dead this morning; throat cut," was the text of a message received yesterday by Chief of Police Burrell of Quincy, and bearing the signature of Chief of Police McEachren of North Sydney, C.B. Griffin, who is believed to belong to Lynn, conducted on his own account a search for Luigi Restelli, the Italian stone worker who killed two persons and wounded three others in this city nearly three weeks ago.

Meaford Gets a Promise Too.

Meaford, Aug. 17.—The Government steamer Speedy arrived from Owen Sound about three o'clock yesterday afternoon, with Hon. Wm. Pugsley, Minister of Public Works, and other officials on board.

Mr. Pugsley promised that a dredging outfit would be sent to Meaford at once.

Inherits Great Fortune.

St. Catharines, Aug. 17.—A Smithville resident, Thomas W. Shipman, has received word that by the death of his uncle, Sir Waverley Smythe, of Deepdene Abbey, near Wycombe, Buckinghamshire, England, he has fallen heir to the estate, together with a legacy of £75,000.

GERMANY'S NAVY PLANS

Berlin, Aug. 17.—The Governmental naval bill, to be laid before the Reichstag this autumn, will ask for an application to build three battleships and one battleship cruiser. Included with these four super-Dreadnoughts will be applications to replace two old battleships just sold to Turkey.

The naval budget for the year will also authorize the construction of two small cruisers and six torpedo boats, and an application for $3,750,000 for submarines.

As a result of the fight between the German shipbuilders and their employes, all the shipyards of Germany, except the Government works, are now idle so far as new construction is concerned. Ship owners are in many cases sending their ships to England for the necessary repairs.

BRITISH COLUMBIA FOR PROTECTION

Vancouver, B.C., Aug. 17.—Following the cue given by Premier McBride, Vancouver yesterday tendered to Sir Wilfrid Laurier a non-political reception. On the Prime Minister's arrival, J. H. Senkler welcomed him on behalf of the Liberal Association, Mayor Taylor and members of the City Council gave an address of welcome, and President Buchan one from the Board of Trade.

The party then proceeded to Dominion Hall, where over four hundred sat down to luncheon. Later, Sir Wilfrid opened the British Columbia Exhibition before a distinguished company.

In the addresses presented a strong plea was contained for a higher tariff to protect the local lumber industry.

Sir Wilfrid noted in reply that the prairie provinces were inclined toward a low tariff on free trade sentiment, while British Columbia favorer protection. The matter would be referred to the Minister of Finance.

"I feel confident," he added, "that Mr. Fielding will be able to frame a moderate tariff which may be in the nature of a compromise, which, I hope, will be satisfactory to all sections of the country."

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

June, 1912, is now regarded as the most likely time for the assembling of the Dominion Conservative convention.

At Portsmouth, Ohio, seven persons are dying and a score of others are seriously ill as the result of eating poisoned ice cream at a church function in Glenn, Ky.

The Labor party of Arizona has applied to the Department of Labor at Ottawa for copies of the labor laws of Canada as a guide in the formation of the constitution of the new state.

The twentieth victim of the deadly street car in Montreal since Jan. 1 was rolled under the wheels of a speeding car of the Mount Royal avenue line and crushed to death yesterday. He was Hormisdas Desjardins, a young French-Canadian boy returning to his home from work.

THERE IS NOT MUCH BAD MONEY

Ottawa, Aug. 17.—Enquiry was made at the Finance Department yesterday in regard to reports that great quantities of counterfeit silver are in circulation throughout Canada.

It appears that the impression has got abroad that on all genuine silver coinage, the small crown on one side is not opposite the crown on the King's head, but on the opposite edge of the coin.

It is explained that this is true, in so far as coinage minted previous to Jan. 1, 1908, is concerned, but since that date, when the Canadian mint opened, coins have been so made that big and small crowns are opposite one another.

It is asserted at the Finance Department that there was never a time when there was less counterfeit money in circulation.

Will Go to China.

Montreal, Aug. 17.—Yesterday was election day in Chinatown in Montreal and in fact practically all over the Dominion. The election, however, was not altogether of a local character, as the representatives of the Chinese are to go to China to represent the Chinese of Canada. Yesterday some twenty-five hundred Chinamen cast their ballots with the result that Lee Mon How, Montreal, and Houn Suam, Ottawa, will represent the Chinese of Eastern Canada at the next assembly. Manitoba and the west also elected two [illegible]

HON. MACKENZIE KING'S TRIP

Ottawa, Aug. 17.—The Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Minister of Labor, left yesterday afternoon for Montreal, when he will sail to-day on the Royal Edward to attend a number of international conferences on important questions of social reform.

The orders in council deputing the Minister of Labor as a representative of Canada at the several conferences were passed some weeks ago, prior to the departure of Sir Wilfrid Laurier for the west.

The conferences in question are the International Congress of Social Insurance, to be held at The Hague on Sept. 6 to Sept. 8; a congress respecting higher technical education, to be held at Brussels Sept. 9 to 12; international conference on unemployment, to be held at Paris, France, Sept. 18 to 21; International Association for Labor Legislation, to be held at Lugano, Switzerland, Sept. 26 to 28, at which will be specially discussed the question of the eight-hour shift in uninterrupted processes, and the question of a minimum wages policy in connection with home work.

For the 'Steenth Time.

Montreal, Aug. 17.—Both the C.P.R. officials and those of the Allan line yesterday morning again denied the story that the railway company had secured control of the Allan line.

"There is no truth in the rumor," declared Sir Montague Allan yesterday.

THIRTY-NINE DROWNED

Gibraltar, Aug. 17.—The Spanish Martos foundered yesterday morning off Tarift, on the African coast, at the entrance of the Straits of Gibraltar, after a collision with the German steamer Elsa.

Thirty-nine were drowned, of whom 32 were passengers. The survivors were landed here.

A dense fog prevailed at the time of the collision.

The German boat stood by and put out small boats, which picked up the survivors, many of whom were found clinging to wreckage.

London, Aug. 17.—The proposed festival of Empire is being enlarged on novel lines. It will be the Empire in miniature, with replicas of overseas Parliament Houses, a model of the all-red route, with ingenious scenic effects. Lord Desborough is arranging an imperial sports meeting.

Biplane Outflies Pigeons.

Amiens, France, Aug. 17.—A flock of 47 carrier pigeons was released at Dousi Monday, at the same instant that Leblanc, in his famous Farman biplane started from the mark on his 50-mile flight to Amiens.

The biplane soon outdistanced the birds, the first pigeon arriving 6 minutes and 20 seconds after Leblanc.

THE CLEANING UP

GENTLEMEN OF THE BOARD OF HEALTH AND THE CITY COUNCIL, WE RETURN THANKS TO JUPITER PLUVIUS FOR THE CLEANING UP LAST NIGHT.

JUST REMEMBER

Just remember when you read Sir Wilfrid Laurier's free trade declarations, that he has given $15,000,000 in bounties in 16 years. That's the sort of free trader he is.

CLOSE THE DOOR

It won't be long and we will look and they are gone; the sky will be quiet, the swallows will have left. It won't be long till the woodland now vocal with blue bird, with blackbird, robin and woodpecker, will have journeyed south. Soon the field will be deserted, the field, the creek and river. The meadow lark, the sand-piper, the snipe, the kingfisher will soon be winging south. The marshes will presently know no more, the long drawn neck the heavy flopping wings of the shitepoke. The crane will move on. The days are shortening, the leaves will soon be dropping. Soon the vine, soon the vine and tree of hill and vale will dress up for the end and their death is a gaudy one. Then approaches fall and winter in its train, when we shout as we hug the fire—"close the door."

THE TEACHER

In the death of Dr. Andrew Smith, for more than fifty years connected with the Ontario Veterinary College, a man of unusual merit passed away. His name was not written large in public print. It was engraved in the [illegible] who passed under his care. It's the personal touch that is remembered, isn't it? We may cheer for Laurier or Borden. If they die we are sorry, but when a kindly-hearted old man like Dr. Smith passes away thousands sorrow as losing a friend. The teacher, whether in the small school in the country, in the college or university, forms unbreakable ties that last down to old age, yes, to the grave. The teacher's mission, next to the parents, is a most important one. They mould, at the most plastic period, the human mind.

A HALF DOZEN MOIRS

The Toronto Star last night published the portrait of Moir, as he looks now. Don't be surprised to read of half a dozen Moirs being arrested, for there are, perhaps, one hundred chaps who look like him. Come to think of it, we all have two eyes, two ears, a nose and mouth, and none of us are eight feet or three feet in height. We are about the average in looks and carriage. When Moir escaped after he murdered his fellow soldier, it will be remembered, there were a half dozen chaps arrested who were dead ringers for him. "Caught," "Murderer Captured." These were the head lines in the paper. Then they caught him working on a farm. Just like a sensible man, instead of a maniac, as it was afterwards discovered that he was. He is free now; where did the money come from? Sometimes we think we are the only ones—tut, tut. We are not murderers, but we think we are in a class by ourselves. Tell that to a policeman. There's a dozen like you; there's a dozen like all of us, who could take our places to-morrow, and soon we'd never be missed. However, our work is to make ourselves as valuable as possible.

THE AVIATOR

There have been several people dropping from the skies lately, and we expect to hear of more. Meanwhile the flying machine has been doomed to failure—the same as the steam engine and gas were doomed to failure in early days. A dozen men can be blown up by a dynamite explosion, and nothing thought of it. But if it were possible for a dozen aviators to drop down in a shower the world would stop aghast. Yet, let a few negroes shoot up on the end of a rope, the article is read and forgotten. It's unusual, that's all. The street cars kill hundreds yearly. However, no one would say the street cars were a failure. There are terrible collisions on the railways, but no one, however big a fool, would prefer to return to the stage coach. When the flying machine is as long on the way as the steam car it is no idle prediction to say that it will be far safer than the dust and cinder route.

FATE

Fleming, Colo., Aug. 15.—In an effort to end his life, John Tague, 23 years old, jumped from a train yesterday. As he was only slightly injured, he shot himself. This resulted in a scalp wound and Tague then ate brimstone. This merely produced unconsciousness, and now the young man is recovering.

If earnestness has anything to do with success he certainly should have succeeded. However, John Tague should be by this time impressed by the fact that no one will die till God Almighty is good and ready to take him. Then he will cease living, no matter how strong his objections, how rich his purse, how favorable the conditions or how skilful the physician. Many great men are fatalists, that strange, mysterious something seems to tell them that they have their work to do. It gave Napoleon a belief in his star and gave him a rash bravery that made him the idol of his army. Frederick the Great said: "The ball that will strike me will be from above." And so with all, the big bugs and us common fellows alike, when the end comes there's no shirking, no dodging. We must take our medicine.

STRANGE ISN'T IT?

Miss Marion McPherson gave a paper on "The Autumn of Nature Compared with the Autumn of Our Lives," before the Women's Institute of Clydesdale, as noted in another column. The idea is inexhaustible. The only difference is Nature has us beaten a hundred ways. When an apple reaches its full age it is at its best. When a leaf is ready to drop it is one of a countless number, bright with a glory defying the artist. Man, as he is today, usually shrivels up when old age comes, becomes dull of mind, or childish, or hard of sight, hard of hearing, can't sleep well, is cranky and a most unlovely spectacle, tolerated only by reason of his age. This applies to many [illegible] meet the human being lovely, affable, and old, we stop and wonder at the miracle. It's funny, isn't it? A man can raise an apple to mature well, or a field of wheat, but when he matures and old age comes he's an awful apology for a man very, very often.

A HORRIBLE EXAMPLE

A child, which has no opening for eyes, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Aitkins of Michigan City, Indiana. This is the second child born in the same condition to the couple, who are first cousins.—Despatch.

In this startling manner it can easily be seen how directly heredity acts. These poor children will grope their way through life; no sun will shine for them, no beautiful landscape, nothing, just blackness at night, and the same darkness in noon day's glare.

And why should the worthless be allowed to marry any more readily than full cousins. The worthless rich are just a big nuisance as the worthless poor. Why should there not be a law governing marriage, a man cannot practise medicine till he is qualified, neither can he become a lawyer. Why should he be allowed to step into a place where he is liable to raise a lot of useless progeny? Water cannot run above its level, and except in freak cases weak minded parents do not produce strong minded children.

THE OTTAWA JOURNAL'S OPINION

The west has seen its timber limits pass into private hands, into the possession of ardent machine Liberals, under an untrustworthy system of tender; it has seen men on the Canadian payroll devoting their entire time to political organizations; it has seen lands purchased from the Government for a few thousand and sold shortly after for a million; it has seen men of mediocre ability become suddenly rich through their political connections.

These things cannot be hidden so much in the west as in the east. These communities are small, and sudden changes in a man's fortune are patent to all. And a few such examples have helped to turn whole communities into active Government opponents.

These are some of the factors which ought to have lost the west to the Laurier Ministry. If the Prime Minister can convince the west that his Government is reasonably clean, that honesty is a chief recommendation to promotion among his officials, that political manipulation for private financial gain is frowned upon and punished, that a petty system of pilfering does not run through many of the departments of the Government, then his Ministry may have a chance of holding its own in the west, when the day of political judgment arrives.

The issue is moral rather than political.

A NEW WAY

Brockville Times.

"A Hamilton clergyman is going one better than the Philadelphia minister, who gives free tickets for Sunday baseball games to those who attend morning service in their churches. He has established a free steamboat religious service on Sunday afternoons. The congregation is taken out on Burlington Bay where religious exercises are conducted as the boat make the pleasure trip."

Now, there is some class to this. There can be no Sabbath breaking here. True, the Turbinia or the Modjeska or the Macassa may not sail from Hamilton harbor on Sunday. It is a sin and against the law. But under the guidance of a sky pilot the passengers may set out, and there will be no sin, no law-breaking. True, it is the same water, the same sun and the same wind to ripple the waves as would have rippled on the other boats but they do not go for pleasure, they go to listen to the minister—we don't think.

EXCUSE OUR BLUSHES

Guelph Mercury.

Of Charles Raymond, a former Guelph boy's new work, "The Happy Life," the Hamilton Times says:—From Dodge Publishing Company we get a copy of Charles F. Raymond's third volume, "The Happy Life." It is in his best style—written as if his genius had been rushed over a very stony road, and at every bump had exploded a bomb of wit. It is as full of apothegms as a volume of Bacon and one of its charms is that you do not have to mentally winnow a mowful of chaff [illegible] wheat. And there's a lot of sage advice in his sentence sermons, too. There's a breeziness and directness about it that indicates the newspaper training. Charlie has struck his gait. [illegible] find their best work doomed to go down to an early grave in the file room. Better luck to Charlie. He has taken to books. Some of his bright sayings may be seen in the years to come. Charlie is editor of the Peterborough Review.

SIDE LIGHTS

PIOUS GUELPH.

Guelph Herald.

Probably the chief of police acted upon request and within the strict limits of the law, but that stopping of the automobile rides to Puslinch Lake is about the tallest piece of rank injustice we care to hear about. If the sanctity of the Sabbath can alone be preserved by methods to make the people stay in the city all day then it will not be long before people will become disgusted and turn to the other extreme.

ROBBED MAGISTRATE.

His Sad Error.

Welland, Aug. 13.—Yesterday Edward Campbell, a young man claiming Toronto as his home, was sentenced to nine months in the Central Prison for burglary. Campbell, when under the influence of liquor, becomes irresponsible. A few days ago he broke into Police Magistrate Burgar's house and secured a number of articles of jewellery, and then went asleep in a drunken stupor in the Police Magistrate's bedroom, where he was captured. Mr. Charles Steele, J.P., of Colborne, tried the case. Chief Jones made the arrest.

OUR BRAVE DEFENDERS.

Kingston Standard.

Thirty years ago our militia camps had fewer officers and not only more men, but these latter were of better physique and higher intelligence than forty per cent. of the little boys who have lately been spending their holidays in camp.

The net result of the two last decades has been to give us a staff at Headquarters and district staffs, out of all proportion to the needs of the service, a pension system which recalls the days of Belshazzar and a museum of elderly gentlemen and smart female typewriters.

Truly our army is but the shadow of a skeleton, with a big gold-laced, well-feathered head, and a tail too feeble to wag.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

The Italian played like an old hand, a number once in awhile, but making it a point to stake on the colors. Red began to repeat itself. He doubled and doubled. On the sixth consecutive turn he played the maximum of 12,000 francs and won. The diplomat touched him on the arm significantly, but the player shook his head. Ten minutes later he had won 40,000 francs. Again he refused to leave his chair.

"If he stays now," said Hillard, "he will lose it all. His friend is right."

"Forty thousand francs, $8,000!" murmured Merrihew sadly. Why couldn't he have luck like this?

Hillard was a true prophet. There came a change in the smile of fortune. The game jumped from color to color, seldom repeating, with zero making itself conspicuous. The man with the scar played on, but he began to lose—small sums at first, then larger till finally he was down to his original stake. The scar grew livid. He waited five turns of the wheel, then placed his stake on the second dozen. He lost. He rose from his chair scowling. His eye chanced to meet Hillard's, and their glances held for a moment.

"Fool!" said Merrihew in an undertone as the man strolled leisurely past them. "Eight thousand, and not content to quit!"

Meanwhile the trolleys from Nice and Mentone had poured into Monte Carlo their usual burdens of pleasure seekers. On one of the cars from Nice there had arrived two women, both veiled and simply gowned. They seldom addressed each other and never spoke to any one else. Doubtless they were some sober married women out for a lark. Upon leaving the car they did not at once go into the casino, but directed their steps toward the terraces, for the band was playing. They sat in the shadow of the statue of Massenet, and near by the rasp of a cricket broke in upon the music. When the music stopped they linked arms and sauntered up and down the wide sweep of stone, mutually interested in the crowds. Once as they passed behind a bench the better to view the palaces of the prince they heard the voices of two men.

As they went on the women heard something about "those bad cigars." The men were Americans evidently. It was only an inconsequent incident, and a moment later both had forgotten it.

"At which table shall I make the stake, Kitty?"

"The center. There is always a crush there, and we shall not be noticed."

"I do not agree with you there. However, it shall be the center table. What would you do, Kitty, if I should break the bank?"

"Die of excitement!" truthfully.

"You will live through this event then." With a light, careless laugh La Signorina pressed her way to the table.

She lost steadily from the start. She gave no sign, however, that her forces were in full retreat from the enemy. She played on, and the hand which placed the bets was steady. And when the gold was all gone she opened her empty hands expressively and shrugged. She was beaten.

Behind the chair of the banker, opposite, stood the Italian. The scowl still marred his forehead. When the woman in the veil spread out her hands he started. There was something familiar in that gesture. And then the woman saw him. For the briefest moment her form stiffened.

"Kitty," La Signorina whispered, "let us go out to the atrium. I am tired."

They left the hall leisurely and found a vacant settle in the atrium.

"How cold your hands are!" exclaimed Kitty.

"Kitty, I am a fool, a fool! I have unwittingly put my head in the lion's mouth. If I had not reached this seat in time I should have fallen. I would willingly give all my rings if at this moment I could run across the hall and out into the open!"

"Merciful heaven! Why, what is the matter? What has happened?"

"I cannot explain to you."

"Was it some one you saw in there?"

"Silence, and sit perfectly still!"

A man in evening dress came out into the atrium, lighting a cigarette. At the sight of him both women were startled.

"It is Mr. Hillard, Mr. Merrihew's friend!" Kitty would have risen, but the other's strong hand restrained her.

"Kitty, remember your promise."

"Is he the man?"

"No, no! Only I have said that we must not meet him. It might do him incalculable harm. Harm!" La Signorina repeated. "Do you understand?"

Hillard blew outward a few pale rings of smoke and circled the atrium with an indolent glance which stopped as it rested upon the two veiled women. A certain curiosity impelled him toward them, and he sank on the settle with perhaps half a dozen spans of the hand between. He observed the women frankly. Not a single whisp of hair escaped the veils, not a line of any feature could be traced, and yet the tint of flesh shone dimly behind the silken bands of crape. He nodded.

The veils did not move.

"Fortune favors the brave, but rarely the foolish."

There was no response, but the small shoe of the woman nearest began to beat the floor ever so lightly. Hillard was chagrined.

Thereupon he bowed and sought another seat. The women hurried to the lobby. He would have given them no further thought had not the Italian with the scar appeared, eyed the retreating figures doubtfully and then started after them. That he did not know them Hillard was reasonably certain. He assumed that the Italian saw a possible flirtation. He rose quickly and followed.

The four departed from the casino and crossed toward the Hotel de Paris, the women in the lead. As yet they had not observed that they were being followed. The car stops at this turn. As the women came to a stand one of them saw the approaching men. Instantly she fled up the street. The other hesitated, then pursued her companion. Whatever doubts the Italian might have entertained, this flight dissipated then. He knew now—he knew! With a sharp cry of exultation he broke into a run. So did Hillard. People turned and stared, but none sought to intercept any of the runners. In Monte Carlo there are many strange scenes, and the knight errant often finds that his bump of caution has suddenly developed. And there were no police about; they were on the casino terraces or strolling through the gardens.

"A lady? Grace of Mary, that is droll!"

Past the park the quartet ran. Then came a stretch of darkness between one electric lamp and another. And then, as if whisked away by magic, the foremost woman disappeared. The other halted, breathless. She started again, but too late. The Italian caught her roughly and quickly tore aside the veil.

"Kitty Killigrew!" Hillard cried.

He sprang forward and grasped the Italian by the shoulders. The Italian struck out savagely, but Hillard seized his arm. Each man could hear the breathing of the other, quick and deep.

"You meddling dog!" gasped Hillard.

"Take care lest the dog bite, signor. Release my arm and stand aside!"

"Presently. Now, that way is yours," said Hillard, pointing.

"Are you certain?" the Italian hissed.

"So certain that if you do not obey me I shall call the police."

"I should like nothing better," replied the Italian, with a coolness which dumfounded Hillard.

"Do you know these ladies?"

"Do you?" insolently.

"My knowing them does not matter. But it is any gentleman's concern when a man gives pursuit to a lady who does not wish to meet him."

"A lady? Grace of Mary, that is droll!"

Hillard released the imprisoned arm. There was a patent raillery, a quizzical insolence which convinced Hillard that the Italian had not given chase out of an idle purpose.

"We shall meet again," the Italian said softly.

"I hope not," replied Hillard frankly. "However, you may find me at the Hotel de Londres."

The Italian laughed again. "You understand the language well," debatingly.

"And the people too." Hillard had no desire to pass the time of day with his opponent.

"Well, I have said that we shall meet again, and it must be so."

"And your hat, as well as mine, is still in the casino. The night is cold."

The Italian permitted his glance to wander over Hillard critically. He swung round on his heel and walked rapidly down the street. Hillard turned to reassure Kitty. Kitty had vanished!

CHAPTER XIII.

MANY NAPOLEONS.

MERRIHEW sighed with perfect content. The pretty woman sitting opposite smiled at him tenderly, and he smiled back abstractedly, as a man sometimes will when his mind tries to gather in comprehensively a thought and a picture which are totally different. Before him in neat little lustrous stacks stood 7,000 francs in gold, 350 effigies of "Napoleon the Little"—7,000 francs, $1,400, more than half the sum of his letter of credit!

He counted off ten coins and placed them on the second dozen. The ball rolled into No. 23. He leaned back again with a second sigh, and the pretty woman smiled a second smile, and the wooden rake pushed the beautiful gold over to him. He was playing a system, one bet in every three turns of the wheel in stakes of $40 and [illegible]. [illegible] and then, but the next play he doubled and retrieved. Oh, the American Comic Opera company should be well taken care of! Two more bets and then he would pocket his winnings and go. [illegible] 40 francs on No. 26 and 400 on black, leaned upon his elbows and studied the pretty woman, who smiled. If she spoke English—he scribbled the question on a scrap of paper and pushed it across the table, blushing a little as he did so. She read it, or at least she tried to read it, and shook her head with the air of one deeply puzzled. He sighed again, reflecting that there might have been a pleasant adventure had he only understood French.

Twenty-six, black and even!

Merrihew slid back his chair and rose. He swept up the gold by the handful and poured it into his pockets, casually and unconcernedly, as if this was an everyday affair and of minor importance. But as a matter of fact his heart was beating fast, and there was a wild desire in his throat to yell with delight. Eighteen hundred dollars, 9,000 francs! A merry music they made in his pockets—jingle, jingle, jingle! And then he saw Hillard coming across the hall. Instantly he forced the joy from his face and eyes and dropped his chin in his collar. He became in that moment the picture of desolation.

"Is it all over?" asked Hillard gravely.

"All over!" monotonously.

"Come over to the cafe, then. I've something important to tell you."

"Found them?" with rousing interest.

"I shall tell you only when we get out of this place. Come."

Hillard put out a friendly hand.

"I am sorry, boy. I wanted you to win something. Cheer up! We'll shake the dust of this place in the morning."

"Oh, for a vacant lot and a good old whooper-up! Feel!" cried Merrihew, touching his side pockets.

"What is it?" asked Hillard.

"What is it? It is 450 napoleons!"

"What?" sharply, even doubtfully.

"That's what! Eighteen hundred dollars! My system will have no funeral tonight."

He caught Hillard by the sleeve and fairly ran him over to the cafe.

"Nearly two thousand!" murmured Hillard. "Well, of all the luck!"

To be continued.

LUCKY SHORT MAN

Halifax Herald.

Many a man of short stature is long on brains.

Many a man of short stature is broad in his views.

Many a man of short stature is high on the road to riches.

Many a man of short stature is way up in happiness.

In fact, there are many distinct advantages in being short of stature, tall men to the contrary notwithstanding.

For example, if you are short of stature—

You don't run against the low awning rods of some stores.

You don't have to keep step all by your lonesome.

You don't attract attention by your height.

You can stand in the front row without causing a riot.

You can sit down to a table without interfering with the feet of other people.

You can avoid hitting chandeliers.

You can usually reach the lady's pocketbook before she picks it up.

You don't interfere with the view of the theatregoer in back of you.

You can be a poet and pass for a blacksmith.

You can say your tall friends remind you of matches, toothpicks, sphaggetti, etc.

You can buy ready-made clothes, fit into the barber's chair, keep your seat in the car because the strap is too high for you, etc.

AN EXCURSION FROM BELLEVILLE

Peterborough was again the source of attraction to-day for a large number of visitors, about six hundred arriving here at 10.40 this morning.

The excursion on which they came was under the auspices of the Ottawa street Sunday school of Belleville. Many people, however, from Napanee, Stirling and other places along the route took advantage of the opportunity of coming to Peterborough, so that the nine coaches of the train were filled to their limit on arriving at Peretborough.

The visitors were given an opportunity of experiencing the sensation of going over the lift lock, the steamer Water Lily carrying quite a number of the curious.

CHILD SUICIDES

Dr. Creidenberg, who has been studying the question for a long time, is organizing an inquiry into the causes and possible prevention of child suicides, which have assumed such terrible proportions in Russia of late years, says a St. Petersburg despatch.

Some of the statistics are interesting. He says that reasons for suicides among children are exceedingly varied, ranging from an American duel to a lost knife or a broken saucer. In one year 436 children in the government's schools committed suicide. In most cases letters were left behind by the children, from which their reasons may be classed as follows:—

Twenty-four per cent. owing to nervous diseases; 22.3 per cent. for reasons too vaguely stated to enable classification; 21.8 per cent. trouble with teachers and fear for result of examinations; 15.2 per cent. family quarrels; 11 per cent. erotic reasons; various misunderstandings at home or in school, 5 per cent.

Amongst the boys, inherited maladies and erotic reasons take the first places; among the girls, trouble with teachers or parents.

Dr. Creidenberg also points out the strange relationship existing between the attitude of the government and the number of child suicides. Unfortunately he only gives the statistics for St. Petersburg. In 1903, before the revolution, there were 113 cases in this city; at the beginning 70, in 1905, during the revolts, 46; in 1906, when the government began to get the upper hand, 877; in 1907, when repressive measures were in full force, 151. The doctor thinks that reaction and child suicides go hand in hand.

S. A. Band Concert

The Salvation Army Band concert last evening was particularly well attended.

Bandmaster Peryer and his splendid company of musicians are deserving of great credit for the high-class music rendered.

The threatening rain had perhaps some influence in restraining even a larger number turning out to enjoy the concert and the rain which commencing to fall about the middle of the concert soon had a scattering effect on those who were in the park.

The selection, entitled "The Rock," introducing the famous hymn "Rock of Ages" was especially pleasing.

AN INTERESTING TALE OF THRILLING ACCIDENT

An interesting account of the disaster to the C.P.R. steamer, Princess May, on the night of August 4th, off the coast of Alaska, has been received from Miss Wynnie Dobbin, who was one of the passengers. The letter is written from a point of Sentinel Island, on which the people took refuge after leaving the vessel.

"I have had some wonderful experiences since I left home, but this is the most remarkable. Here we are on this island. Fortunately there is a lighthouse, but with no immediate prospect of getting off. Our boat, the Princess May, left Skagway about eight o'clock last night with a passenger list of seventy and a crew of fifty-seven. About twenty minutes to two this morning we were awakened by a noise and shaking of the vessel as if we had struck a rock. I jumped out of my berth and looked out of the window, but could not see anything but the faint light of the lighthouse in the distance. In a minute every one was moving and eagerly questioning each other as to the cause.

The next thing heard was four blasts from the whistle, which meant "All hands at stations," and the crew took their places and proceedsed to get the life boats ready. The stewards passed, looking into each berth and saying, "Get dressed and be ready to leave the ship at once. No baggage allowed."

Such a hurrying and feverish, aimless grabbing, in most cases for the nearest articles that could be stowed away on the person. I gathered what little things I could, and my ticket, money, and with my dress on over my night clothes, and a big cape on over all, I was ready. I found when finally I got on board the life boat that I had carefully secured both my camera and work bag. Within two minutes everyone was on deck and the life boats ready to receive their precious freight.

In our boat were eight ladies and four men to row. It was a sorry looking crowd that was landed, eventually on the rocks of the island. There were ten boats, so that in time every passenger was safely landed, and many were the prayers and expressions of thankfulness that no one was lost.

LITTLE LOST.

After the passengers were looked after the people of the ship began to bring across the baggage of the state room passengers. It is wonderful how well this was done. As no person had taken time to pack up the contents of one's grips, all were pretty well scattered around the state rooms. The boys packed everything they found in each person's room, and with the exception of one or two everyone found all their belongings intact when they finally recovered their suit cases.

GALLANT OFFICERS.

Not too much praise can be given the officers and men of the ship for the gallant and brave way in which they acted. Everything was most orderly, and the discipline was wonderful.

On Sentinel rock is a large lighthouse, which proved a blessing, for we have been made very comfortable. Hot coffee and biscuits were passed around, and we were finally made easy and warmed. It was now getting daylight and we could see where we were. The tide was out and we could not see what the cause of the accident was. The boat was high and dry on four sharp rocks with the bow high up and a big hole in the bottom. The wireless officer worked the wonderful wireless steadily from the time of the accident until eleven o'clock before he could get any answer. On account of the height of the mountains all around it has been difficult to send the messages. However, about eleven an answering signal was received from Sitka, where the Olympia, of the Pacific Coast service, is now heading. A little later we learned that the steamer Georgia is now on the way from Juneau. I do not think that I have ever put in such a long day. Everyone is feeling so shaken up by the accident, and it is the only subject for conversation. Some incidents occurred that looked, now the danger is over, very amusing. Each one has his little story of how he behaved when the affair happened, and there were surely some funny doings. Provisions were brought from the ship to the island, and at noon a substantial lunch, with hot tea and coffee was served, and everyone felt more comfortable.

AT LAST.

About five o'clock the Georgia was seen coming toward us. It did not take long for everyone to get ready to leave the island, and by six we were steaming away towards Juneau, where we were to await until a boat could be sent to take us on our way. At Juneau we were made comfortable at the hotels and everything was done by the officers of the Princess May to make our enforced stay more enjoyable. At Juneau we found Mr. Oliver, who had beeen a passenger on the up trip of the May, and who had made many friends on board. His home is in Douglas, where he has a large gold mining interests. On Saturday afternoon Mr. Oliver chartered the boat, "The Lone Fisherman," and took all the passengers over to Treadwill, where we were shown over the stamp mills and mines. These are the most famous and largest gold mines in the world, and are well worth seeing. The Treadwill mines are mostly run by English capital, and the stock is listed very high.

TRIP TO GLACIER.

On Saturday a trip to the famous Taku Glacier was organized. This is the largest glacier in the world and is truly a wonderful sight. On the way we passed through a flow of icebergs, such pretty ones, light blue, turquoise blue and the deepest navy. The glacier itself is immense and covers a very large area. We went very close to it and had an exceptional good view.

The Princess Beatrice is coming for us this morning from Prince Rupert and we continue our journey south. ... The officers and the crew of the Princess May have done everything that was possible for the comfort of the passengers, who certainly appreciated all their efforts. The Alaskan waters are difficult to navigate, and much of the danger is due to the hidden reefs, which are not visible at high tide. Every precaution is taken, though, and few accidents occur.

RECEPTION COMMITTEE COULD NOT SEE ITS WAY CLEAR TO ACT ON BOWLERS' REQUEST

A deputation from the Peterborough Lawn Bowling Club waited on the Legal Committee last night and requested that body to give the club a grant in connection with the entertainment of the Scotch bowlers on August 23rd.

Mr. Thos. Brightman acted as spokes man for the deputation and said that eighteen bowlers would be here. They were men of standing and it would be a good plan to use them as liberally as possible. If the city showed an interested attitude in the visitors it would give them a better impression of the town. He called attention to the fact that the bowling club had spent a lot of money in connection with their property and were still at a continually high expense.

The committee stated that they had had to refuse a grant to the master painters and Knights of Pythias on the occasions of those bodies conventions here and felt they could not do otherwise in regard to the bowlers' request. No action was taken therefore on the request.

WHAT THE BOARD OF WORKS DID AT ITS SESSION HELD LAST EVENING

No very large matters were taken up by the Board of Works at last night's meeting, but there was considerable detail for the Board to attend to. Ald. Hicks was in the chair.

A deputation which wanted a regulation sidewalk on Engleburn and Dale avenues, were assured of consideration of the request at the next council meeting. The engineer will report on the matter.

Ald. Morgan asked the experiment of oiling the recently improved stretch of Hunter street east, from the bridge to Mark street, be carried out. This will be done.

Water street, from McDonnel north and George, from Simcoe to Brock, will be given the crushed stone treatment.

The city solicitor was instructed to draw up an agreement with Mr. E. G. Patterson, respecting the laying of the C.G.E.'s water mains on Albert street.

The Fair directors were granted permission to put streamers on George and Hunter streets.

The request of Grafton & Co. for permission to put up an extended sign of seven feet will be dealt with at the Board's next meeting.

Mr. Ed. Finnie will be granted a cement crossing in front of his residence, 211 Barnardo avenue.

The chairman and engineer may dispose of the roller now in disuse (not the steam crusher) to Mr. Kells, of Millbrook, at what they may consider an advantageous price. Mr. Kells' offer of $125 is considered a little small.

Mr. James Brunswell, 1019 Water street, wants Mill street repaired. The street commissioner and engineer will report on the matter, and in the meantime the underbrush will be removed.

The chairman and city solicitor will see the G.N.W. regarding the removal of the company's poles.

Will Smith street be named with the name placed in the cement? The chairman asked the Board's idea on this, and they will give it their serious consideration.

The street commissioner was asked to devise a means of preventing the soil from coming down on Sheridan street.

SPORTING NEWS

"THEY'RE OFF" AT THE RINK OPENING OF ROLLING SEASON

The Brock street roller rink opened last evening, and judging by the way it was patronized this pastime promises to be just as popular as it has been in other years.

The rink this year is under the direction of the same manager as last, Mr. J. Meharry. He has spared no expense or pains to put the floor and dressing rooms in a comfortable and first-class condition, and the roller rink will be a splendid place at which to spend an hour or two at any time of the day, as it is open morning, afternoon and night.

At eight o'clock the doors were thrown open to skaters, and before long the floor of the rink was covered with devotees of the rolling art.

Roller skating is a graceful, pleasing mode of progression, being equal, or even more pleasing to witness than dancing, and as the strains of the band floated through the large home-like room, the variegated colors of the ladies' dresses and the long streamers of flags which were hung in profusion around the rink, the view combined contrived to present a gay and entrancing scene.

Every person was happy; the soft strains of the waltz was intoxicating, and the swaying motion delightful At times the glare of the lights was softened by turning them off slightly, and in the semi-darkened building the skating was continued while the music was soft and low.

The grand march was held at 9.30, and this form of diversion will be as popular as ever, judging from last evening.

The manager of the rink, before putting on the grand march, made a short address. The instructors at the rink will pay particular attention to learners, and in all ways the rink this year will be conducted in an orderly and satisfactory manner. Season tickets, also will be a new feature.

THE POLICE STOPPED BOUT

New York, Aug. 15.—In compliance with orders issued by Acting-Mayor Mitchell the police prevented the ten-round bout between Al Kaufman ,of California, and Bill Lang, of Australia, at the Fairmont A.C. to-night. Shortly after eight o'clock, when the arena was packed to the doors, President Wm. Gibson, of the Fairmont Club, was notified by a squad of Central Office detectives that if an attempt was made to pull off the big bout the doors would be broken in and Kaufman and Lang would be placed under arrest. Gibson tried to explain that his club was operating strictly in accordance with the law, and was also protected by a Supreme Court injunction refraining the Police Department from interfering with the club's affairs, but the sleuths were obdurate, and said they would carry out their orders to the letter. Gibson, therefore, concluded to have no [illegible], and notified the police that the Kaufman-Lang bout would be declared off.

AN ODE TO THE BOOKMAKER

When you were a Bookie and I was a Fish
In the good old Summer time,
And you sat on your stool, serene and cool,
Cool as a small green lime,
On the One superlative Bet,
My heart was light and the world seemed bright,
For I hadn't grown wise—not yet.

Mindless I tore to the betting ring,
And mindless I staked my roll,
And I walked back home with an aching dome,
And blisters on either sole.
Long was the way and the sky was gray,
And I hadn't a single ace—
Just the rubber band in my trembling hand
That had kept my bills in place.

And I thought of the skate that finished tenth—
Tenth in a field of ten!
No wonder you grinned as I hastily skinned
That elastic band from my yen.
And I thought of the tailor, the landlord grim,
The ring I had promised Her.
And the notes unpaid 'neath the three balls' shade—
I saw these things in a blur.

Did you think of me, my gambling friend,
As you sat at Delmonico's?
While I made a mash on some corned beef hash
You were up where the grape stuff flows.
I ate at a counter, perched on high,
As a boy eats jam from a shelf,
For the man that will fool near a Bookie's stool
Must eat on a stool himself.

When you were a Bookie and I was a Fish
At beautiful Sheepshead Bay,
I put my rocks in your square tin box
And you did not tell me nay.
Now we sit here broke—you, too, got yours,
As the years swept by with a swish,
So a toast or two to the days when you,
Were a Bookie and I was a Fish.

CRICKET

Owing to the rain the cricket match between Warkworth and Peterborough has been called off. Word was received from Warkworth by the local cricketers this morning that the rain was falling fast in their vicinity and on that account it was thought best to postpone it. No further arrangements for a future match have been arranged. The game was to have been played at Nicholls oval at eleven o'clock this morning.

ON THE DIAMOND

Interest continues to increase in the big baseball game on Saturday, when the Belleville picked team and the T. A.S. meet.

The visitors will arrive here about 8.10 Saturday morning and the game will be called at three o'clock.

The T.A.S. will have the same line-up as usual, Quinlan in the box and McFadden receiving. J. Corkery will be on third.

A great battle is expected. Darke will referee as usual.

Scarboro Beach

Visitors to the Toronto Exhibition this year cannot afford to leave Scarboro Beack Park out of their plans. This $600,000 amusement resort, modelled after Dreamland and Luna Park, the world-famous institutions, at Coney Island, is the finest of its kind outside of New York itself, and has been visited by millions of delighted patrons in the four years that it has been in existence. Its permanent structures include a scenic railway, a quarter of a mile long, a chute-the-chutes, 800 feet in length, and an underground watertrip called the Cascades, which furnishes an unforgetable experience. In addition there are the Streets of Cairo, Human Butterfly, House of Nonsense, Electroscope Theatre, Johnstown Flood, Aerial Swings, Caroussel, Midway, Bumps, Laughing Gallery and many other novelties which are renewed each season. There will be special fireworks and sports for the Exhibition visitors. The Sunday afternoon and evening free band concerts at the park are a popular feature.

A Suggestion For the Revivalists.

Rip Van Winkle had just brushed the last of the cobwebs out of his eyes.

"I subbose somebody vill werry likely make a play about me," he said in his Catskill stage dialect.

"No doubt about it," replied a bystander.

Rip yawned heavily, the spell of his long nap being still strong upon him.

"Vell," he said, "I hope if dey do write such a play dey von't try to revive it after it has been asleep for dwenty years."

And then he smiled, and they all filed into the tavern and imbibed another one of the kind that didn't count.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Deacon's Parable.

A self conscious and egotistical young clergyman was supplying the pulpit of a country church. After the service he asked one of the deacons, a grizzled, plain spoken man, what he thought of his morning effort.

"Waal," answered the old man slowly, "I'll tell ye in a kind of parable. I remember Tunk Weatherbee's first deer hunt, when he was green. He foller'd the deer's tracks all right, but he foller'd 'em all day in the wrong direction."—Housekeeper.

Between Neighbors.

"This thing has gone far enough," stormed the man in the bungalow. "Your chickens come through the fence and ruin my garden."

"Well, why don't you keep an eye on them?" asked the man in the cottage.

"What? I'd have you understand that I'm not going to mind your chickens."

"Mind them? Well, if you don't mind them what in the world are you talking about anyway?"—Chicago News.

Crushing.

Mars on being introduced to Bellona became very sentimental.

"You look nice enough to eat," he simpered.

She regarded him severely. "You mistake the name, sir—Bellona, not Bologna," quoth she, with crushing froideur.

Whereupon such of the gods as were within earshot gave way to Homeric laughter.—Puck.

Logical Deduction.

"A Nevada coroner's jury decides that a prizefighter met his death in the ring by colliding with the floor."

"By the same token a man pushed from a skyscraper roof by another would meet his death from the fall."

Often Unintelligible.

It was a Boston baby
That came along one day
To grow amid the culture of
The famous old Back Bay.

They named the infant Browning,
For he was simply grand,
And then he said so many things
They couldn't understand.

G. P. Pitched.

A pleasing diversion from the routine of political meetings occurred recently at Melville, Sask., when the occupants of the Government cars challenged the press car to a game of baseball. Since leaving Fort William Sir Wilfrid has been pressed almost beyond his strength, and was entitled to a rest. F. F. Pardee, M.P., was captain of the Government forces and R. H. Patchin led the newspaper men. Hon. Thomas McNutt, ex-Speaker of the Northwest Territories Legislature, was umpire. Hon. G. P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, pitched for the Government.

Sir Wilfrid was an interested spectator, and after the Government team had defeated the united press forces by a score of 9 to 7 he complimented his colleagues, and said: "You have saved the Government by a small working majority."

It is now reported that Dr. Crippen and Miss Leneve will not fight extradition.

TOWN WITHOUT TAXES

Chicago Tribune.

Orson, a town in Sweden, is probably the only municipality in the world which has ordinary city expenses, but which imposes no taxes. Moreover, the local railway is free to every citizen, and there is no charge for telephone service, schools, libraries and the like.

This happy state of affairs is due to the wisdom of a former generation of citizens and rulers of Orson, who planted trees on all available ground. During the last thirty years the town authorities have sold no less than $5,000,000 worth of young trees and timber, and judicious replantings have provided for a similar income in the future.

CLYDESDALE

Special to the Review.

Clydesdale, Aug. 16.—The harvesters are very busy and are certainly taking advantage of the good weather.

Misses A. and M. Bullied, of Apsley, were the guests of Mrs. Bullied on Saturday.

Miss Herr is back at her duties again.

A number of the young people attended the True Blue picnic at Couches Landing, and report an excellent time.

Miss M. Fletcher, of Toronto, is spending her vacation with her parents.

Miss E. Gerrard returned to Peterborough after spending her vacation with her mother.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Bristol and infant son, spent a few days with Mrs. A. Blackburn.

The people are talking of having a picnic the latter part of this month.

WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

The Women's Institute of Clydesdale met in the school house on Saturday and had a very nice meeting. The meeting was opened by singing "The Maple Leaf." Miss Marion McPherson gave a very helpful and intelligent paper on "The Autumn of Nature Compared With the Autumn of Our Lives." Miss McPherson then gave a few hints about Women's Institutes. A few recipes were given in making salads, creaming beets, etc. The president favored us with a reading. Miss McPherson was called upon and rendered a vocal solo. The meeting closed by singing the National Anthem. The minutes of the last meeting were omitted, as the secretary-treasurer was absent. In her absence the vice-president took the minutes of the meeting. Lunch was then served by Mrs. Duncan McPherson.

A full account of the Gerrard-Hart nuptials appeared in August 15th issue of the Review.

Give Family Income a Chance

Perhaps the family income is big enough after all.

Perhaps the reason it does not seem to go as far as it should is because you do not spend it thriftly enough.

Perhaps when you buy, you do not go to the right stores at the right time.

If you read the store advertisements regularly you will soon see ways of stretching your dollars.

You will soon learn where to go for this and where to buy that.

You will soon be giving your "expense money" a chance to buy you the things you now need and other things that a little surplus money might make you think you need—

But which you cannot now afford.

C. C. JAMES ON TENNYSON.

Ontario's Deputy Minister of Agriculture Is an Author.

Mr. C. C. James, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, who is credited with having added millions to the agricultural wealth of this province by wheedling farmers into the gradual adoption of progressive and enlightened measures in agriculture, is also well-known as a bibliophile. He has perhaps the finest collection of Canadian volumes of verse extant and his collection of Tennysoniana is also most complete. Mr. James has lately added to the volume of literature relating to the great Laureate a little publication of his own in pamphlet form containing two papers, "A Tennyson Pilgrimage," and "Tennyson, the Imperialist." The first named paper was the result of a little journey of homage to the poet's English haunts, that Mr. James made in 1909, the centenary of Tennyson's birth. The second paper deals with a phase of the poet's career not generally familiar. Tennyson, Mr. James points out, was one of the earliest Imperialists of the type with which we are familiar to-day. Not the least interesting part of the little brochure are the extracts from Lady Tennyson's diary showing that as early as 1870 the laureate was an advocate of colonial conferences in England and declared "How strange England cannot see her true policy lies in a closer union with the colonies." His indignation over an editorial in The London Times, published in 1872, suggesting the probability of the separation of Canada from Great Britain, as a not undesirable contingency, was intense. He stopped the press to include a reference to it in the dedication of "Idyls of the King," which was addressed to Queen Victoria. The allusion ran:

"And that true North, whereof we lately heard
A strain to shame us—'keep you to yourselves,
So loyal is too costly! friends, your love
Is but a burden; break the bonds and go!'
Is this the tone of Empire—Here the faith
That made us rulers? This indeed her voice
And meaning, whom the roar of Hougomont
Left mightiest of all nations under Heaven?
What shock has fooled her since that she should speak
So feebly? Wealthier—wealthier—hour by hour!
The voice of Britain, or a sinking land,
Some third-rate isle half lost among the seas?
There rang her voice, when the full city peal'd
Thee and Thy Prince; The loyal to their crown
Are loyal to their own far sons, who love
Our Ocean Empire with her boundless homes."

To Make Northwest Passage.

Capt J E Bernier of the steamer Arctic has set out on his trip to the far north with the intention of making the northwest passage. He has sent from Chateau Bay to the Department of Marine and Fisheries a program of his proposed voyage, which is as follows: From Chateau Bay he will sail for Albert Harbor, Pond's Inlet; from there he proceeds to Beechy Island. The next place of call will be Bealy Island, the next Winter Harbor, and from there he will go to Herschell Island.

Capt. Bernier intimates that if he reaches Herschell Island without any accident he will proceed direct from there to Vancouver, B.C.

SUMMER COMFORT

A Sewing Chair That's That and Lots More.

GIFTS FOR THE TRAVELER.

Amusements For Children on an Ocean Voyage—Summer Window Shades That Make For Coolness—A Delicious Lemonade That Is Little Known.

Dear Mabel—New York became so intolerably hot that we just rushed down to Belle Harbor one Saturday afternoon not long ago and luckily found a charming cottage which had not been rented, so we took it, and at the present moment I'm sitting on the porch with a glorious view of the ocean in front of me, for you must know that Belle Harbor is only an hour's ride from town and right on the ocean. Well, the chair that I'm occupying is one of the joys of my life, and I stumbled across it quite unexpectedly in a department shop last week. It is called a sewing chair, but it has many other uses. At first glance you would take it for an ordinary rocking chair, with the peculiarity of having solid sides, but when these sides, which are hinged at the seat, are let down its other uses are well understood. These sides become transformed into broad arms on which you may lay your sewing or use your writing pad as I'm doing now. Except for unusual work these arms are as good as a table. But I'm not half through with the attractions of the chair, for you can take the rockers off when you want it to be stationary and fold them up, and the chair will rest firmly on its four legs. What do you think of that for a "stunt" piece of furniture?

A PORCH SEWING CHAIR.

Gift For the Traveler.

Dorothy D. went abroad last week, and I made her such a pretty little steamer present, one that I found so useful the last time I crossed. It's a simple portfolio made of gray canvas, with a single large pansy "for thoughts" worked on the cover. To make the portfolio all that is necessary are two pieces of cardboard the desired size. These are covered with the canvas and lined with violet silk. The two materials I overcast together all round the edges. With a hinge of ribbon the portfolio is complete. Oh, yes, I forgot to say that on the reverse side of the cover I embroidered Dorothy's monogram and that two ribbons passed around the portfolio are tied to keep the contents secure. I used my case for preserving prints and drawings while traveling.

And, talking of gifts, when children travel a few well chosen presents will keep them happy. It really takes very little to amuse children. A box of gifts to last through the days of ocean voyage can be arranged that may make all the difference between a pleasant and a disagreeable trip to both mother and child. Such a box was recently got up for some children by a friend of mine. The outside box, of generous proportions, was tied about with a silk flag, for the youthful traveler, particularly if he is a boy, wants to flaunt the stars and stripes on all patriotic occasions. Each small box put into the large one was numbered, with directions as to when it was to be opened and how its contents were to be used. For instance, "Box No. 1" contained peppermints to be opened after the first meal on board. "Box No. 2" had an exciting deck game to be opened the next afternoon. A morning gift was a tablet and a set of colored crayons. Another gift was a set of bean bags made of blue linen marked with the owner's initials. A game of cards with the pictures of the masterpieces in art was a helpful gift.

An outfit for making paper flowers was a very suitable gift for the girl of the party, and to one of the boys just learning to tell the time a dollar watch was given.

Older little people frequently get restless on long trips. For them was a box of candy made doubly sweet by writing some little personal messages and humorius sayings on bits of paper and wrapping them around the bonbons. And what child would not love to receive a pretty box containing a fountain pen, a book of stamps, a few special delivery stamps, postal cards and paper wrappers? Little red leather record books would not come amiss either, as the young traveler would feel most important when making notes of the trip. And what fun it would be to read such notes written by a child of an imaginative mind!

The Double Shade.

I think it so queer that more housekeepers do not know about double shades that are to be had for windows. In summer they are particularly desirable. They are not wonderfully new; but, as I have just hinted, very few women know of their existence. Most women who want to keep out the glare of the summer sun, yet have attractive window effects from the inside, use two sets of shades, the dark green ones hanging next the window to keep out the sun and the white ones next the room over which to hang curtains of cool looking net or muslin. This is bunglesome and unnecessary, as it is possible to buy shades that are green on the outside and white or cream on the inside, or if you want the dark side next the window they can be made in this way.

Mother has just brought me a glass of "frog lemonade." You never heard of it? Probably not. It's a southern drink that is perfectly delicious, and I know you'll bless me one of these hot days if I give you the recipe. Take a large punch bowl, put in a pound of sugar, three quarts of water, the juice of two dozen lemons and one of pineapple and add two bottles of seltzer water. Mix all well. Add a dozen or so ripe strawberries or cherries and thin slices of pineapple and lemon. If not sweet enough add more sugar. When thoroughly mixed add a large square of ice and let the mixture get very cold before serving. Fill the glasses one quarter full of crushed ice and fill up with the lemonade, adding with it some of the fruit. This is a very generous quantity, but the proportions could be easily reduced.

Yours devotedly, MABEL.

When Going on a Picnic.

Do not attempt too much is the best all around rule for the picnic giver, says Marion Harris Neil. Do not go too far. Hungry people are never at their best. Do not overelaborate the food. A large choice is not necessary. A plentiful allowance of a few well selected and appetizing dishes is much wiser. Do not arrange too long a day. An early start is difficult for the hostess, who has much to oversee in packing and arranging, and unpopular with most people.

If the picnic party happens to have among its numbers some young people we must cater for big appetites and provide substantial sandwiches.

Though substantial, they need not be dry, coarse or plain. Pack carefully. For this purpose always save tin candy boxes and pasteboard boxes of a convenient size. Have on hand plenty of oiled paper. It is indispensable.

Paper cloths and napkins are now so dainty that many hostesses use them at picnics in preference to taking their own table linen. In arranging for a picnic have as few things to take home as possible. Nobody wants to take home the surplus edibles which should never have been taken. The most fickle appetite surprises itself under the mellowing influence of invigorating air and the novelty of it all, but it has a limit too.

Cucumber sandwiches are an old standby for the veranda tea and the summer picnic, but one woman has a way of giving these old timers a little different tang from those usually served. The secret may be in the few drops of onion juice which she sprinkles over the slices of the vegetable and in the paprika with which she seasons the mayonnaise that moistens the filling.

Household Hints.

Do you know that coffee stains, even when there is cream in the coffee, can be removed from the most delicate silk or woolen fabrics by brushing the spots with pure glycerin? Rinse in lukewarm water and press on the wrong side until quite dry. The glycerin absorbs both the coloring matter and the grease.

Do you know if a cloth is wetted in vinegar and wrung out as dry as possible with the hands and wrapped around cheese and then the whole put in a large paper bag and kept in a cool place the cheese will retain the moisture and freshness of a newly cut cheese and will not mold.

Do you know that in peeling apples the brown satin that generally appears on peeled slices can be avoided by setting each slice as it is peeled in a basin of cold water? Thus no contact with the air is possible, and the stain is avoidable.

The water draws out the acids, and there is a sacrifice of flavor to color if this plan is used and the apples are soaked too long. Any discolored slices will turn white again if rubbed with a piece of lemon.

Do you know that sometimes the most careful washing will not remove the flavor and odor of food from the utensil in which it was cooked?

This is frequently the case with fish, onion, cabbage, etc., but there is a remedy which may be a little trouble and yet is well worth trying. After any of these articles have been cooked wash the utensil well with soap and water. Then nearly fill it with cold water and for each quart of water add one tablespoonful of dissolved washing soda.

Place on the fire and let the water get boiling hot. Now pour the water into the sink. Rinse the utensil with clean water, and on wiping it dry it will be found perfectly sweet.

A Change In Furniture Covers.

There is a change in the materials selected for loose summer coverings for furniture. The pale tans and grays that have concealed or protected, as the case may be, chairs and sofas for a number of years may have the quality of coolness to recommend them, but they were certainly depressing.

Now it is the fashion to make the slip covers of pretty cretonnes, not necessarily light, but in cool looking greens and browns, soft blues and dull pinks. These are much prettier than the linen and will last an entire summer without a visit to the laundry.

TRANSPORTING DON JOSE.

What Sir William Van Horne Found When He Went to Cuba.

Before Sir William Van Horne built the Cuba railroad, the transportation problem worried none of the Cuban Dons greatly. The country, according to Norman Rankin in July Canada Monthly, lay dreaming under a centuries-old habit of Spanish leisure. "In fact," he says, "nobody cared much whether school kept or not.

"Under the Spanish regime in Cuba traveling was a serious business. Does Don Jose Miguel Fermandez Filipe Sebastian y Herera desire to go anywhere? That, look you, is a matter for thought. He discusses it gravely with his family and friends for a week or so, over coffee and cigarettes; perhaps at the end of that time he does not feel that there is need for instant haste, and loafs over more cigarettes and fresh coffee for another ten days.

"At last, summoning up his energies, he languidly sends for Pedro, and requests that the conveyance be made ready.

"In a reasonable Spanish time (which anywhere else would be an outrageously unreasonable one) Pedro returns. The volanta-wagon is minus a wheel. Que calamidad! What misfortune! Car-r-ramba! Likewise Voto a Dios! It is to repair it. Exit Pedro.

"Business of interval, and more cigarettes. Re-enter Pedro. The volanta-wagon is repaired, but he is desolated to inform the senor that the off mare is ill. Ah, child of a pig that she is to fall ill on this most auspicious day of days! But, Santissima Maria,—with an outward gesture of the hands that casts Pedro a passive wreck at the senor's illustrious feet—the fact remains that the off mare cannot stand up. More impassioned Spanish, and another interval.

"Eventually on some one of those vista to-morrows, the volanta-wagon is at last ready. Don Jose Miguel Fermandez Filipe Sebastian y Herera deposits himself and all his names in the creaky, wooden-wheeled contraption—and spends heaven only knows how many days of hay-foot straw-foot travel in reaching anywhere.

"But it is so seldom that one wants to reach anywhere," says he, "that what does it matter? Except Englishmen and Americans, who are always wanting some mad thing. It is much better to remain in the cool patio and smoke cigarettes!"

"Spiritual Comforts" Provided.

An incident occurred at Farnum camp, where the artillery and cavalry of the Province of Quebec receive their annual training, which illustrates the danger of speaking in metaphors. It is laid down in the regulations of the Militia Department of Canada that during the training manoeuvres the artillery must not fire unless there is a medical officer present with the necessary stores to dress wounds in case of accident. The officer in command of the artillery is held responsible for the carrying out of this regulation, and this year, as usual, a surgeon with an ambulance and stores was detailed to attend the batteries during practice. One very hot afternoon two colonels who were directing the firing became overcome with thirst, and riding over to the medical officer, asked him what he had in his ambulance, thinking that he would appreciate the significance of the enquiry:

"Bandages, dressings, some instruments and two stretchers," replied the medical officer.

"Any 'spiritual comforts?'" asked one of the colonels.

"No. I did not know they were required," said the medical officer.

"Well, that's something you should never forget," said the thirsty officers, covering their disappointment philosophically.

"I promise that the matter will be attended to to-morrow," said the surgeon, and the others rode away.

Next day the two colonels, as the day progressed, began to suffer again from heat and thirst and rode over to the ambulance.

"Well, have you brought those 'spiritual comforts' to-day?" they asked with pleasant anticipations.

"Yes, indeed, I have attended to that," replied the medical officer, and forthwith introduced the chaplain of the 26th Canadian Horse.

A Canadian Punster.

Very ingenious was the manner in which the late Alexander Pirie could handle the English language to make a Canadian pun. There was a discussion in the press as to the possibility of a murderer going to heaven on an eleventh-hour repentance. Some murderer sentenced to be hanged had declared that he was going straight to Heaven. Mr. Pirie's comment was a doubt as to whether there exists a next world for men who have their "necks twirled" in this.

His most famous jest was made when the Scott Act was sweeping the counties, and he suggested that the Minister of Agriculture raise a grade of short horns for use in Scott Act counties.

In 1896, when Hugh John Macdonald joined the Tupper Administration, and came to tour Ontario, with his chief, a great deal of fun was poked at Hugh John, who was alleged to be traveling on his father's reputation. Like his father, he has a very large nose, and Liberal newspapers did not hesitate to say that that nose was his chief asset, and the strong reliance of the Conservative party. Mr. Pirie affected to be grieved over those personal references to Hugh John's nose. "It's a disgrace," he wrote. "It's worse than a disgrace. Snoutrage."

Bears Near Barrie.

While coming into town on the morning of the 9th, Mrs. Thomas Dawson was surprised to see a black bear and cub standing on the side of the road near the home of Alexander Payette on the 8th con. of Vespra. The bears were within 100 yards of the house. At the sound of voices the larger one reared up and stood watching the rig. "Look at him," said Mrs. Dawson to her little boy, "look at him. It's a real bear." The animal stood blinking gravely at the rig and its occupants for a few moments, while the horse manifested a desire to climb the fence on the opposite side of the road. Presently, with a low grumble, containing nothing but satisfaction heard only in bears who have dined right royally on strawberries in the woods, Milady Bruin dropped on all fours and ambled into the swamp, followed by the sleek cub.—Barrie Gazette.

LIGHT CROP.

The crop of wild rice is very light this year. It is so light in fact, that there will probably be none anywhere worth harvesting. Usually, it is supposed that a year with frequent shower is favorable for the crop, but this rule has not seemed to work out this season. It is probable that the frequent changes of the level of the water this season, owing to the work going on at Hastings dam, is the cause of this year's failure.

PURE MILK

Lethbridge Daily News.

Montreal's Public Health Department is making an earnest effort to insure a pure food supply for that city, and their latest effort has been directed towards improving the milk supply in an effort to lower the heavy infant death roll for which the royal city is notorious. A force of inspectors are canvassing the districts where the city's milk supply is obtained.

Their work is partly missionary and partly to investigate the [illegible] under which the city's milk supply is prepared for the Montreal consumer. The result of this campaign will be beneficial and the need of cleanliness will be fully impressed upon many who are now assisting in making the infant death rate of Montreal what it is. Those who will not prepare the milk in a proper manner will be barred from the Montreal market so that when the producers find that it will be to their financial benefit to exert every care to keep the milk pure and clean, better results may be looked for. The crusade should prove of untold good to the city.

We would like to see samples from the milk venders in Prince Albert analyzed and the report published as was done in Saskatoon. None of the Saskatoon milk vendors reached a score of 75 points, the minimum for good milk. The majority scored around 50 points while one vendor's milk scored as low as 15 1-5 points.

The health committee of the city council should let us know something of the milk we are using in Prince Albert.

CHEESE BUYERS TOOK THE FACTORIES IN PARCELS

Several Got a Piece of the Pie at the Board Meeting This Morning—Eleven Cents the Big Figure—How the Sales Were Made.

The bidding was pretty well cut up at the cheese board this morning, and there were no very large hauls by any of the buyers. Eleven cents was the high price, and this is an excellent figure, in comparison with that realized on other boards.

The boarding was heavy, over one hundred boxes being placed by nearly every factory.

In the absence of President Switzer Mr. Coughlin was in the chair.

Mr. Squires worked up to the bid of 11 cents on the opening.

No buyer cared to go any higher, and Mr. Squires took Oakdale, Daisy D. Norwood and Killarney.

Mr Weir named 10 15-16 for further selections. He took Selwyn, Central Smith, Lang. He then bid 10 7-8 for ufrther.

Mr. Cook raised it to 10 15-16. He took Shearer, East Emily, Myrtle, Warsaw. He bid 10 7-8 for further and took Villiers, Westwood, Ormonde, Maple Leaf. King Edward refused. offered 10 13-16 for further.

Mr. Gillespie made it 10 7-8. He bought Keene, Warminster, Trewern, Bensfort, Cedardale, Cavanville, Fraserville. Mr. Gillespie bid 10 13-16 for further.

Mr. Weir advanced it to 10 7-8. He named Lakefield. Pine Grove, Young's Point, North Dummer. Indian River wouldn't ship at Peterborough. Fleetwood and King Edward accepted.

Mr. Gillespie said he would accept Indian River at 10 7-8, and the factory was willing.

This cleared the board.

An adjournment of two weeks was made.

The boarding of the cheese was as follows;—

Keene	125
Warminster	116
Shearer	125
Central Smith	180
Selwyn	166

CHEMONG NOTES

Chemong, Aug. 16.—The fishing is reported to be good this week. On Monday Mr. Harold Hill landed a nice fourteen pound 'lunge. On the same day Rev. Mr. Gall, of Toronto, who is spending a few weeks at the Park, accompanied by Mr. William J. O'Brien, hooked eleven black bass.

Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Gliddon entertained a large crowd of the youngsters and a few grown ups last evening at their cottage. Dancing to the music of a small, but splendid orchestra was kept up for a few hours, and refreshments topped off a most enjoyable evening. The affair was given in honor of Miss Gertrude Dalton, of Toronto, who has been spending a few weeks, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Gliddon, and who leaves this week for her home.

MARKSMKN AT O.R.A. MATCHES ARE BREAKING ALL RECORDS

Many Bull's-eyes Are Scored and Possibles Seem to be the Order of the Day as a Result of the New Peep Sight—Dundas High School Wins Pellatt Trophy.

Long Branch Rifle Ranges, Aug. 18.—Riddled with 280 bullets in a minute and a quarter! What chance would a man with shoulders 20 inches wide have in a fusilade of that kind? Yet that is just what would have happened to a man if he were exposed to eight fellows who were shooting here to-day.

In the Macdonald match, which is a quick-firing contest, in which the 20-inch bull's-eye is exposed for 75 seconds at 500 yards, eight tied for first place with "possibles," seven straight bull's-eyes. And they weren't pumping from magazines either, for each cartridge was put in separately by hand. There were six others who scored six "bulls," and an "inner," and seventeen others who were only one point behind these.

The day was distinguished throughout by record-breaking scores, and, at that, conditions were not ideal. It is still very hazy out here and the dull light is keenly felt where the shooting is at the new "figure" targets. The light did improve some in the afternoon, though, and the wind dropped to a light steady left breeze.

Better still than the Macdonald match was the shooting in the "Mackenzie" match at 800 yards. Twelve men tied for first place with perfect scores—35 for 7 shots. Twenty-four others followed up with 6 bulls and an "inner." Thirty-three others were just one point behind these again, and there were 24 scores of 32 counted out of the money. Last year all the 32's, 31's and a considerable quota of 30's were within the awards. And last year there were only five perfect scores.

In the Macdonald match last year only two scored possibles, against eight this year; and only four made 34's against seven yesterday. Twenty-nines and thirties were counted last year, and this time only one thirty got in the winnings.

Sergt.-Major Utton of the R.C.R., and Lieut. E. L. Forester of the Canadian Engineers were the only men to make perfect scores on the "figure" targets. They each got five straight bulls and each put on three extra bulls. In the extra series matches there were scores and scores of possibles at all ranges.

Dundas High School will be the first holder of the new Pellatt trophy for cadets. They won the former trophy three times, and now possess it for good.

In the Bankers' Match yesterday three men scored 69 out of a possible 70 at 500 and 600 yards. Last year the highest score was 68, and there was only one of these, only one of 67 and three of 66. Yesterday there were seven of 68, five of 67 and sixteen of 66. Last year 59's got inside the prize money; yesterday there were ten 63's counted out for being too small. The "tyros" this year had to get 59 or over to receive cash.

Sergt. G. W. Russell of the Foot Guards, Ottawa, is in the lead for the grand aggregate, with Lieut. Forster, C.A.E., Ottawa, Sergt. E. A. Eastwood, 90th, Winnipeg, Lieut. Morris, 18th, Lieut. Blackburn, 90th, Winnipeg, Sergt.-Major Dymond, R.C.R., Sergt.-Major Utton, R.C.R., Staff-Sergt. H. Kerr, 48th, Toronto, and Blair Mitchell, 48th, Toronto, close up for second place.

NEW METHODIST COLLEGE WILL BE BUILT AT CALGARY

Presbyterian Message in Favor of Church Union is Received by the Methodist Conference in Session at Victoria, B.C.

Victoria, B.C., Aug. 18.—At the morning session of the Methodist General Conference there was a hot time in the educational committee when the rival claims of Calgary and Lethbridge to the proposed new perparatory college were discussed. Both sides put up a stiff battle and the discussion threatened to become personal on several occasions. At noon, however, the committee finally decided on Calgary as the location.

The committee on itinerary discussed the question of a longer term for pastors than at present. At adjournment the majority were in favor of a term of eight years, instead of four, as at present. The arguments in favor of this were that the longer term would give a pastor greater opportunity to accomplish effective work, and would admit his taking a more active part in civic affairs. The committee will report favorably on an eight-year term.

Dr. F. C. Stephenson, secretary of the Young People's Missions, has arranged a big exhibit and will conduct a series of mission meetings during the conference, which will be addressed daily by returned missionaries from foreign fields, of whom there are a number present.

The lengthy reference to pantheist tendencies in the old land by Rev. Dr. Haigh, the fraternal delegate from England, in his address Tuesday evening, met with severe criticism informally yesterday morning, on the ground that he had emphasized the matter too much.

The question of church union loomed up in the afternoon. A delegation acting on behalf of the Presbyterian General Assembly waited on conference to extend greetings. Rev. J. Campbell of Victoria, as spokesman, expressed the hope that church union would be duly consummated as a result of the conference now in session. Rev. Dr. Carman said he regarded the movement as the most important of modern ages.

Miss McElhinney, superintendent of the training school for deaconesses in Toronto, reported for her order. Her work she characterized as the youngest branch of the Methodist Church in Canada. It had for its purpose the mothering of the congregations. Dr. Carman made a strong appeal for the broadening of the deaconess movement until it became universal.

A strong appeal for more men and money to be utilized in the mission fields of Japan was made by the Rev. C. J. L. Bates, a Methodist missionary on his way to reside in college at Kobe. The Japanese, he said, were fully the equals in intellectual liberty and devout consecration of any other Christian body.

CHICAGO MAN CROSSES CHANNEL WITH PASSENGER IN A STORM

Architect Named Moissant in Aeroplane For the Sixth Time and Burly French Mechanic, Taking His First Trip, go From France to England Without Mishap.

Deal, Eng., Aug. 18.—John B. Moissant of Chicago yesterday flew across the English Channel from Calais to Tilfanstone with a passenger.

The two-man flight was the more astonishing as it was only a month ago that Moissant learned to fly, and he made so few flights and was so little known among airmen that even his nationality was not disclosed. He was reputed to be a Spaniard, and only when he landed in England was it revealed that he was a young architect from Chicago.

To make the feat still more surprising, Moissant was totally ignorant of the geography of his course. He had never been in England, and was obliged to rely entirely on the compass while crossing the channel was accomplished in the teeth of a strong westerly wind.

The channel flight was an incident in the aerial voyage from Paris to London. Moissant left Issy, France, Tuesday in company with Herbert Latham, and reached Amiens in two hours. Latham's aeroplane was wrecked and yesterday morning Moissant, leaving Amiens at an early hour, headed for Calais. His mechanician, Albert Fileux, who had accompanied him across the country, took his place in the machine when the motor was set in motion for the dash across the channel. Thousands who had gathered to watch the daring aviator were amazed, and urged him not to make the attempt in the face of the half gale that was blowing.

Moissant, disregarding their warnings and even the fact that there was no torpedo boat to follow in his wake, did not deter him. He made the trip in 37 minutes. When he descended his eyes were bloodshot and greatly inflamed, as a result of the heavy rainstorm into which they drove on approaching the English coast. The high wind beat the rain into the faces of the men like hail, almost blinding them.

An average height of about 300 feet was maintained over the water. The aviator expected to land at Dover, but was forced by the wind a few miles north, and made the coast near Deal. The cold was intense, and both Moissant and his mechanician were benumbed.

Moissant, who is 35 years old, first visited Paris some months ago and became interested in the study of aviation. He had two machines built after his own designs, and found the subject so fascinating that he determined to become a practical airman. His flight yesterday was made in a Bleriot machine, which weighs about 800 pounds. He himself weighs about 150 pounds, so that the total weight amounted to nearly 1,150 pounds.

Fileux, a burly Parisian, clad in overalls, did not know where he was going when he started, but says he felt quite at home, as he had the greatest confidence in the pilot.

MACDONALD ADVOCATE OF PEACE

Toronto, Aug. 18.—Rev. Dr. J. A. Macdonald, editor of The Globe, is to surrender the details of management of that newspaper to Stewart Lyon, the associate editor, and devote himself to the cause of international peace.

The change in office work will relieve him of the routine and give him greater opportunity for editorial writing and public speaking.

"As to the peace movement, understand that there is no society or particular organization in connection with what I am going to do," said Dr. Macdonald yesterday. "Mr. Andrew Carnegie is not behind it as you suggest. Some time ago David Starr Jordan, president of Leland Stanford University, California, who has been on the fisheries arbitration at The Hague, called on me and asked me to give my whole attention to the task of improving international relations—stimulating good-will among the nations of the world.

"I shall use all the opportunities to do so that present themselves. For instance in September I will deliver an address in Mexico at the Centennial celebration of independence, and on Founders' Day next March, I promised Mr. Jordan to speak at Leland Stanford."

Mr. Ginn, head of the well-known publishing firm of Ginn & Co., Boston, is one of those chiefly interested in the international movement, and the president of Leland Stanford will, like Dr. Macdonald, devote considerable time to its propagation. It is understood that the offer which Dr. Macdonald refused exceeded $10,000.

TWO POUND BABIES SMALLEST IN WORLD

Chicago, Aug. 16.—A unique christening took place in the infant incubators at Riverview exposition, when the reputed smallest twins in the world, born to Mrs. "Gus" Thompson, No. 949 Newport avenue on June 13th, were received into the Greek Catholic church.

Because the tiny girls, which weigh only one pound each, are still too delicate to remain out of the incubator for any length of time, it was necessary to hold the christening service in the nursery of the incubator building. Rev. Ambrose Mandilare, of the Church of the Three Saints, conducted the ceremony. The twins are now two months old.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER DISCUSSES IMMIGRATION QUESTIONS AT VANCOUVER

Vancouver, B.C., Aug. 18.—Before an audience numbering from 8,000 to 10,000 persons, Sir Wilfrid Laurier discussed the problem of Asiatic immigration Tuesday night. The Premier spoke for over an hour and his speech can properly be said to be his greatest oratorical effort of the present tour.

The Premier began by declaring that a great deal of misapprehension existed in the province over the Government's policy in relation to oriental labor. It had been claimed that the result of voting for the Liberal administration would be that the Grand Trunk Pacific would be built, not by white labor, but by Asiatic labor, that British Columbia would not remain a white man's country.

"But to-day we can look our opponents in the face and tell them with some pride that the G.T.P. Railway was built last summer, and that not one Asiatic laborer has been imported for it," he said.

"This is a question which affects not only British Columbia, but the whole of Canada; it affects England, it affects the whole British Empire. It has always been my purpose to discuss it, not from the point of view of British Columbia only, but from the point of view of British Columbia, of Canada, of England, and of the whole Empire. My policy has been built all the time upon two different conceptions. If possible, the relations between Great Britain and the Government of Asiatic nations should be of a friendly character. My second proposition is that if we do not admit immigration from the Orient, from China, Japan and India, the good relations which ought to exist between Great Britain and Asiatic nations could not be maintained. This is the policy I have endeavored to maintain. (Applause.)

"You have looked at the question simply from the point of view of the labor man. I have looked at it from the point of view of the whole Empire. The end is the same, but the methods different, and I ask you which is the most conducive to the peace and to the integrity of the Empire?"

Referring to the arrangement with the Japanese Government, he thought this had been honorably maintained.

Hon. George P. Graham dealt with the question of transportation. In time the Grand Trunk Pacific would have to come to Vancouver, he said.

BACK FROM THE DEAD

London, Aug. 18.—Mrs. Galpin, wife of License Inspector Galpin, got a big surprise Tuesday night when her brother, John Orr, whom she believed to be dead, and whom she had not seen nor heard of for thirty-five years, walked into her home. Mr. Orr has been living all the time in Fort Worth, Texas, where he has become wealthy in the carriage building business. He is now 73 years old and served through the civil war with the Confederate forces.

Big Barn Burned.

Napanee, Aug. 18.—Fire, supposed caused by the heating of hay, completely destroyed the large barns of W. H. Hunter, situated on the edge of the town, with 200 loads of hay and five horses. Loss $10,000; insurance $7,000.

Torpedo Boats Collided.

Kiel, Aug. 18.—The German torpedo boat S 76 in a collision Tuesday night in Kiel Bay rammed the torpedo boat S 22.

Both the torpedo boats sank. The crews were saved.

FOUGHT RATS FOR THREE HOURS

New York, Aug. 16.—A man who said he was John Maugham, clung in water up to his armpits under a dock at the foot of West Thirty-Ninth st. yesterday for three hours, fighting off savage rats that tried to bite him. He was finally rescued by the police in such an exhausted condition that he had to be given hospital treatment before he could be sent home. Maugham had been drinking heavily last night and wandered down to the dock. He told the police that members of the "Hell's kitchen gang" had robbed him of $400 and pushed him off the dock.

The tide carried him under dock and he caught a strand of rotten rope, by which he was able to support himself.

THE JAPANESE FLOOD LOSSES

Tokio, Aug. 18.—The extremity of suffering and destitution among more than half a million people here is indescribable.

More than 1,000 are either killed or missing, nearly 4,000 houses are destroyed and more than 150,000 houses damaged as a result of the Japanese floods, which have been worse in Tokio and its suburbs, where the city is supporting 100,000 refugees.

The damage to the rice crop is estimated at 4,500,000 bushels.

Borden In Cape Breton.

St. Peters, C.B., Aug. 18.—R. L. Borden's meeting here yesterday was very successful. A fair estimate of the number present is one thousand. The day was favorable. After Mr. Borden, ex-Judge Doherty spoke, confining himself principally to the navy question. The meeting lasted four hours. The large portion of young men present was particularly noticeable.

Accidentally Shot.

BONNYCASTLE RESIGNS SEAT

Winnipeg, Aug. 18.—A. L. Bonnycastle, Conservative, who was declared elected for Russell in the provincial election after a recount, has resigned his seat.

Bonnycastle's opponent was first declared by thirteen, but the recount gave the seat to Bonnycastle, owing to a number of ballots having extraneous pencil marks. The Liberals claimed these ballots were spoiled while in possession of the returning officer after the election, but this is denied in the statement of resignation.

NO RAGTIME FOR GUARDS' BAND

London, Aug. 18.—Bandmaster Williams of the Grenadiers Band, who are to play at the Toronto Exhibition, says the full strength of the band is 66, but only 40 are going to Canada. Only good music will be performed, and the programs will include no more numbers than are absolutely necessary of what are commonly called "popular airs."

"The Canadian bands themselves will be able to supply an abundance of 'raytime' and similar music if the people require it," he said. "At the same time I will not be too austere in the character of the music I shall give them."

The Guards' band will play in Toronto daily from 11 to 1, from 4 till 6 p.m., and from 8 till 10 p.m.

BALFOUR SOON TO BE PREMIER

Montreal, Aug. 18.—At a luncheon given here yesterday by Major Stephens, president of the Board of Harbor Commissioners, in honor of Lord Brassey, the guest of honor, in rising to reply to the toast to his health, in a bright, cleverly thought out and worded speech, predicted that there would be a change of Government in the old country very shortly, and that Mr. Balfour would gather around him in his new Parliament representatives from the states beyond the seas.

The aged peer also predicted that the present tariff difficulties would eventually be settled by true British common sense, settled favorably for the old country and the Empire without any particular regard to the political platform of any party.

DELIBERATE MURDER OF POLITICIAN

Chicago, Aug. 18.—Daniel Cummings, said to be one of Senator Lorimer's lieutenants, was shot and killed yesterday by Thomas J. Bent, alleged to be allied with a faction opposed to Lorimer.

Bent calmly awaited arrest and refused to talk until he had consulted a lawyer. Neighbors told the police that Bent waited for an hour in front of Cummings' home and began firing when Cummings appeared.

ONTARIO POWER CO.'S PROFITS

Niagara Falls, Aug. 18.—The Ontario Power Co., which is under contract to supply power to the Hydro-Electric Commission and which owns all of the $1,000,000 capital stock of the Ontario Transmission Co. and guarantees its bonds, has leased the properties, franchises and future undertakings of the transmission company to April 1, 1950, with the privilege to acquire the property after the bonds have been retired, or which may be issued shall have been paid and retired by the power company.

For the year ended on June 30, 1910, the combined earnings of the two companies showed gross receipts from sale of power of $704,000, an increase over 1909 of $250,000, or 55 per cent.; net, after expenses was $522,000, an increase of $349,000, or over 200 per cent.

Forest service officials in Oregon have obtained direct evidence that serious forest fires in the northwest were started by men who later procured employment as fire-fighters.

Col. Roosevelt is going up in the air—literally—according to Clifford B. Harmon. The aviator says the ex-President has accepted an invitation to make a trip in his aeroplane next Friday afternoon.

The London (Eng.) Daily Mail says to the American settlers the doctrine of free trade means more than a readjustment of tariffs. It represents the ultimate adoption of a continental union. Behind and beyond this trade policy lies a problem of the gravest concern to the Empire.

Choir Practice

All Saints choir will practice to-night at 8.30.

STUNG TO DEATH BY A BEE; DIED QUICKLY

London, Aug. 15.—That the sting of a bee may in certain circumstances prove fatal within a few minutes is shown by the death of Mr. W. M. Rhind a builder, of Fulham road, London, who died from shock within half an hour of the time he was stung.

Mr. Rhind was taking a holiday at Kirdford, Sussex, and on Monday morning, accompanied by a boy, he went mushrooming. He was stung on the left temple and almost immediately collapsed. As he fell to the ground he pointed to his temple and said "Sting." The boy ran to the nearest house to get some ammonia, and when he returned with help Mr. Rhind was unconscious.

At the inquest, which was held on Tuesday, the medical evidence showed that the heart and lungs were congested as the result of the shock to the system.

HARVESTER FROM ONTARIO KILLED

Gladstone, Man., Aug. 18.—The body of a man found on the track near Ogilvie is believed to be that of an Ontario harvester who fell from a special excursion train. The only identifying mark is that the end of the little finger and the index finger of the right hand are cut off.

A celebration is being held at Conception Bay. One of the chief features is the placing of a memorial tablet, presented by the City of Bristol, England, in the monument which denotes the site of Guy's first colony.

The colony has issued a special series of postage stamps to mark the anniversary.

CHARRED BONES FOUND IN BARN

Chatham, Aug. 18.—Five charred bones, proven to be those of a human being, were found yesterday morning in the ruins of Alexander McKenzie's barn in Dover, which was burned to the ground night before last. The cause of the fire was said to have been spontaneous combustion in a bin of barley, but now it is supposed to have been started by a tramp who sought shelter in the barn. It is supposed the tramp was burned with the building.

STRUCK DEAD BY LIGHTNING

Meaford, Ont., Aug. 18.—A fatality occurred about fifteen miles south of here during the severe electric storms which visited the vicinity yesterday afternoon.

Montreal, Aug. 18.—The curt announcement in the militia Gazette, issued in Ottawa, that Col. W. D. Gordon, officer commanding the Quebec command, is retired, Aug. 1, 1910, has set military circles in Montreal wondering. Both in Ottawa and Montreal official circles there is complete reserve as to the reason.

The Daily Review

THURSDAY, AUG. 18, 1910.

WHAT WAS THE REASON ?

Last Sunday evening a young man, accompanied by a lady, attended a well-known city church. The usher took them two (2) seats from the back and stopped. These people, who attend the theatre once in a while, are not used to back seats. So they went out—went up into the gallery. The church was only half full. What was the reason, anyway ?

HOW ABOUT THE CHIMES ?

Why, what about the chimes fund ? We believe a city the size and importance of Peterborough should have a splendid set of chimes. Oakville, population 2,500 in summer time and 1,500 in the dreary winter, has a fine peal of bells. Why not here ? They don't preach salvation, but they give good music. They can announce in glad tones any national event or in solemn requim help mourn if a calamity has befallen the nation. Hurry them, Canon Davidson.

GIVE HER A LITTLE HOLIDAY

Mr. Houseowner, has it ever occurred to you that your wife would like a little holiday ? She is tired of housework. She is sick of washing dishes, darning socks, making beds, and getting the meals. She wants a change. You have a change. At night when work is over, you come down town with the boys. She stays at home with the kids. Dig down in your jeans and see that she has a little outing.

WHY THESE CLOUDBURSTS

judgment on the Board of Health for not seeing that there is a garbage system in force as they have full power to do ? We hope not. We trust that it is merely a wet spell to disappear on the morrow. Boards of Health have great power, but in most small cities, as in Peterborough, they are afraid to use it for fear of [illegible] of making an enemy or two. What is life if we can't fill our positions, be ourselves without asking our neighbor ? We cease being men and become not monkeys, or ninnies, but apologies for men. In Brantford there is an epidemic of small-pox. The Board of Health says "vaccinate." They mean what they say. The public are objecting, but the Board of Health have got the law on their side, and what the Board of Health says goes, even the shutting off water, stopping street cars, closing churches and schools. But say, have we got a Board of Health ? Ask the women who burn or bury their garbage.

A GREAT SPENDER

Watch Laurier chuck the money about on his western tour. It is a spending campaign. Wherever the Grain Growers' Association relax their attention sufficiently to allow him to follow the lines which he had planned, he scatters promises of public works, while the contractors middlemen, dispensers of patronage and party beneficiaries stand about with greedy eyes and pockets already bulging in anticipattion. Their desires must be met at any cost, and the country's needs will be twisted to help their interests. The public funds must be distributed lavishly to ensure plenty of friends to the Laurier Government, and to provide a huge campaign fund for the coming general election.

Look at the list of promises and spendings as it stands to-day:

National Transcontinental; was to cost, $50,000,000; will cost $200,000,000.

Georgian Bay Canal—$180,000,000.

Welland Canal deepening—$30,000,000.

Saskatchewan River, canal, probably—$100,000,000.

Total to date—$530,000,000.

The west desires certain policies to be adopted. Sir Wilfrid Laurier counters by offering to buy it with public works.

GIRLS, LEARN TO SWIM

"Learning to swim, especially for young people, is such a small matter that it is surprising that at least every man and boy should not possess the accomplishment." —Ottawa Citizen.

And what is the matter with the fair maiden learning ? Men wear pants, and when they fall overboard have more chance of keeping afloat, women also wear skirts. They are liable to interfere with their attempts to keep above water. We teach women how to make cake, make bread, make beds, and keep house. In this country of lakes and rivers who should we not teach them to swim. Many a tomb-stone is now over a grave, many a scar is in the living heart, because the dead are there. Why ? Just because they couldn't swim. Girls, get on your bathing suits and by all means learn to swim.

WORRY THAT KILLS

Our good friend Dingman, of the Stratford Herald, wr.tes half a column on WORRY THAT KILLS. For the moment he ceases becoming an editorial writer, becomes a surgeon, and cuts a man's head open. He says in part ;—

"It is as if the skull were laid bare and the surface of the brain struck lightly with a hammer every few seconds with mechanical percision, with never a sign of a stop or the failure of a stroke. Just in this way does the annoying idea, the maddening thought that will not be done away with, strike or fall upon certain nerve cells, never ceasing, diminishing the vitality of the delicate organisms that are so minute that they can be seen only under the microscope.

A man may go out and get drunk as a fool. He will become sober and sorry, have a dark brown taste in his mouth and a big head. A fellow may contract typhoid fever and recover. He may totter forth into the world an emaciated skeleton to afterwards become as fat as a Peterborough alderman. He may do lots of things, and eventually live to a fine old age. But, say, worry kills more than want, worry kills more than whiskey, worry kills more than war—worry is the enemy of the race. A man or woman who is always worrying sins no less than the booze fighter or the gambler. What good is worry ? Has it ever helped any ? Does it ever pay any bills ? Does it ever make you happier ? Does it ever make your friend happier ? Your wife more glad to see you ? Your husband more anxious to come home in the dark ? Parsons preach against wickedness in the days of the children of Israel, and tell us to be good to-day, but what about that cardinal, deep-dyed, deep-rooted sin that's wrinkling the face, whitening the hair, worry is the name. Don't worry, it's a crime. We know

"Many a saint's reflection
Would hardly bear inspection."

But don't worry, it's not only sinful but foolish. There are hundreds insane through abuse, through want, through drink. There are thousands insane, raving maniacs, who never abused themselves, who never drank, who never wanted—ALL THEY DID WAS WORRY.

COMMON SENSE IN ARRESTS

"Some of those who would not [illegible] the chief of police of Cleveland many have regarded him as too soft-hearted in his treatment of offenders. Mayor Gaynor, of New York, is adopting similar methods and they seem to be based not on sentiment, but on common sense. He says that the police make many needless arrests.

"A boy was arrested for throwing a rubber ball on the street, another for dancing on a building platform. Two men who were quarreling should have simply been separated. Three men were brought in for talking in a loud and boisterous manner. Drinking beer out of a can led to other arrests. A boy who drives a delivery wagon until late every night for a large departmental store, and walked out to the corner within five minutes after getting home and eating the supper his mother saved for him, was stupidly lugged off for loafing and obstructing the street.

"In these cases, not only is injustice done to the person arrested, but the time of the officer is wasted and the duty of protecting good citizens is neglected while he is lugging some harmless man to the station. Intelligent officers, says Mayor Gaynor, do not make trivial and foolish arrests. They smooth things over and pass along !"

The Brandon Sun says this, and this call from the far west has a lot of common sense in it, hasn't it ? Many policemen don't know enough to come out of the rain. However, Peterborough is blessed with bluecoats who, taken all around, are large with common sense.

In London, England, two men can go along the street singing a popular song without being gathered in for being disorderly. If they are too lusty voiced, if they shout, instead of sing, they would be warned. Not arrested. In this country in larger cities, let one make a mismove of any kind if he has been drinking and it's all off, it's the cells for him. The civil policeman is the friend of the public, and there is no reason why a civil policeman should not be as popular as a preacher. The policeman who is always aching to show his authority is cordially hated, and some day or other will surely get his bumps. The real office of a policeman is not to make arrests, but to protect life and property, keep the street clear, rather than act as a censor of manners.

SOCIALISM

Socialism

Charlie Hays is looked upon as a stubborn man. It is just his type that brow beats labor, robs them beyond the standard set by other labor thieves and puts the flaming passion of revolutionary ideals into the hearts of the workers. Go on, Charlie. Keep up your gait and you will have every man working under you a red hot Socialist.

This is from Cotton's Weekly, published at Cowansville, Que. This paper is a socialist organ pure and simple. It however, is too rabid. Most socialists of the too radical type defeat their own ends by their bitterness.

Now, there isn't a socialist who decries Chas. M. Hays, who wouldn't take his place to-morrow, if he could. Most of the men of whom we are jealous are too successful that's all. As conditions are to-day unions are necessary to keep its restraining hand on immense corporations. Socialism will eventually triumph. Nothing can stop it, but the change must come by evolution rather than by revolution. Education arriving legislation will come naturally and with ease. Socialism is dormant in the heart of every workingman. Where is the great leader ?

COULDN'T COME BACK.

Chicago Post.

Enoch Arden crept softly up to the window and peered in.

The former Mrs. Arden sat talking sternly to Enoch's successor.

"Do as you like," she was saying. "But, remember this, it's just as I told Enoch when he got to thinking he was boss of the house; You may go away, but you can't come back."

Fortunately, Mr. Tennyson learned of the incident before the eminent literati of the prize ring got to it.

TWO LEGGED PUPS.

Galt Reformer.

And now they are trying to create a dog aristocracy in Ottawa, a petition having been presented to the city council, signed by quite a number persons, asking that the dog by-law be amended to make a distinction between the well-bred dogs and other canines lower down in the scocial scale. Perhaps they are tired of two-legged society puppies and some of the real kind.

Scarboro Beach

Visitors to the Toronto Exhibition this year cannot afford to leave Scarboro Beack Park out of their plans. This $600,000 amusement resort, modelled after Dreamland and Luna Park, the world-famous institutions, at Coney Island, is the finest of its kind outside of New York itself, and has been visited by millions of delighted patrons in the four years that it has been in existence. Its permanent structures include a scenic railway, a quarter of a mile long, a chute-the-chutes, 800 feet in length, and an underground watertrip called the Cascades, which furnishes an unforgetable experience. In addition there are the Streets of Cairo, Human Butterfly, House of Nonsense, Electroscope Theatre, Johnstown Flood, Aerial Swings, Caroussel, Midway, Bumps, Laughing Gallery and many other novelties which are renewed each season. There will be special fireworks and sports for the Exhibition visitors. The Sunday afternoon and evening free band concerts at the park are a popular feature.

The Lure of the Mask

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

Copyright, 1908, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co.

"It does seem too good to be true. I say, what's the matter with your cravat?"

Hillard looked down at the fluttering end and reknotted it carelessly.

"I saw Kitty tonight," he said.

To Merrihew it seemed that all the clatter about him had died away suddenly. He breathed deeply. "Where is she?"

"I'll explain what has happened."

Merrihew listened eagerly.

"And why did you bother about the Italian?" he interrupted. "Why didn't you hold on to Kitty?"

"I confess it was stupid of me, but the gentleman with the scar was an unknown quantity. Besides, why should Kitty run away from me of all persons? And why, when I spoke to them in the casino, did they ignore me completely?"

"It's your confounded prima donna. She's at the bottom of all this, take

He swept up the gold by the handful.

my word for it. Something's desperately wrong. Persons do not wear masks and hide in this manner just for a lark. Why didn't you knock him down?"

"I wanted to, but it wasn't the psychological moment. You can't knock a man down when he practically surrenders."

"You're too particular. But what's the matter with Kitty? I don't understand. To see you was to know that I was round somewhere. She ran away from me as well as from you. What shall we do?"

"Start the hunt again or give it up entirely. There are some villages between here and Nice. It must be in that direction. They were about to [illegible] been gambling, if you had been sensible and stayed with me"—

"Come, now, that won't wash. You know very well that you urged me to play."

"You would have played without any urging."

"And who is this Italian anyhow?" asked Merrihew. "And why did he run after your prima donna?"

"That is precisely what I wish to find out," answered Hillard.

"I'm afraid that Kitty has fallen among a bad lot. I'll wager it is some anarchist business. They are always plotting the assassination of kings over here, and this mysterious woman is just the sort to rope in a confiding girl like Kitty. One thing, if I come across our friend with the scar"—

"You will wisely cross to the opposite side of the street. To find out what this tangle is it is not necessary to jump head first into it."

"A bad lot."

"That may be, but no anarchists, my boy."

Hillard was a bit sore at heart. That phrase recurred and recurred: "A lady? Grace of Mary, that is droll!" The shadow of disillusion crept into his bright dream and clouded it—to build so beautiful a castle and to see it tumble at a word! The Italian had spoken with a contempt based on more than suspicion.

"Kitty doesn't wish to meet us," Merrihew bitterly observed. So we'll light out for Venice in the morning. I'm not going to be made a fool of for the best woman alive."

In the meantime the lamps in the casino had been extinguished. In the harbor the yachts stood out white and spectral. The tram for Nice shrieked down the incline toward the promontory. At the foot of the road which winds up to the palaces the car was signaled, and two women boarded. Both were veiled. They maintained a singular silence. At Villefranche they got out. The women stopped before the gates of a villa and rang the porter's bell. Once in the room above, the silence between the two women came to an end.

"Safe! I am so tired. What a night!" the elder of the two women sighed.

"What a night truly! I should like to know what it has all been about. To run through dark streets and alleys, to hide for hours, as if I were a thief or a fugitive from justice, is neither to my taste nor to my liking."

"Kitty," she began sadly, "in this world no one trusts us wholly. We must know why. Loyalty must have reasons; chivalry must have facts. You have vowed your love and loyalty a hundred times, and still when a great crisis confronts me you question, you grow angry, you complain, because my reasons are unknown to you. It was blind terror which made me run. I counted not the consequences. I shall tell you why I am lonely, why the world, bright to you, is dark. I am proud, but I shall bend my pride." With a quick movement she lifted her head high, and her eyes burned into Kitty's very heart. "I am"—

"Stop! No, no! I forbid you!" Kitty put her hands over her ears. She might gain the secret, but she knew that she would lose the heart of the woman it concerned. "I am wrong, wrong. I have promised to follow you loyally, without question. I will keep that promise. I am only angry because you would not let me speak to Mr. Hillard. He is very handsome," Kitty added thoughtfully. "He is strong too."

"Strong and cruel as a tiger. How I hate him! But thank you, Kitty; thank you. Sooner or later, if we stay together, I must tell you. The confidence will do me good." Kitty approached, and La Signorina drew her close. "I have wrought harm to no one. But on my side they will tell you that I have been terribly wronged. And all I wish is to be left alone, alone. It was cruel of me to forbid you to speak to Mr. Hillard. But I wish him to recollect me pleasantly, as a whimsical being who came into his life one night and vanished out of it in two hours."

"But supposing the memory cuts deeply?" [illegible] Kitty. [illegible] fall in love with less excuse than this."

"Nonsense!" La Signorina opened the window to air the room. She lingered, musing. "You are very good to me, Kitty."

"I can't help being good to you, you strange, lovely woman, for your sake as well as for mine. Now I am going to write a letter."

La Signorina still lingered by the window.

Merrihew was pocketing currency in exchange for his gold when Hillard passed an open letter to him:

> My Dear Mr. Hillard—Do not seek us. It will be useless. If Mr. Merrihew is with you, tell him that some day I will explain away the mystery. But this please make plain to him—if he insists upon searching for me he will only double my unhappiness.
> KITTY KILLIGREW.

Merrihew soberly tucked the letter away. "I knew it," he said simply. "She is in some trouble or other, some tangle, and fears to drag us into it. Who left a letter here this morning?" he asked of the concierge.

"A small boy from Villefranche."

"Just my luck," said Merrihew. "I said that it would be of no use to hunt in the smaller towns. Well, we had better take the luggage back to the rooms. I am going to Villefranche."

"You will be wasting time. After what happened last night I am certain they will be gone. Let us respect their plans, hard as it may seem to you."

"But you?"

"Oh, don't bother about me. I have relegated my little romance to the garret of no account things, at least for the present," said Hillard, with an enigmatical smile. "Make up your mind—we have only twenty minutes."

"Oh, divine afflatus! And you lay down the chase so readily as this?" Merrihew was scornfully indignant.

"I would travel the breadth of the continent were I sure of meeting this woman. But she has become a will-o'-the-wisp, and I am too old and like comfort too well to pursue impossibilities."

"But why did she leave you that mask?" demanded Merrihew. "She must have meant something by that."

"True, but for the life of me I can't figure out what."

"But I don't like the idea of leaving Kitty this way without a final effort to rescue her from the clutches of this fascinating adventuress."

"I admit nothing, my boy, save that the keenness of the chase is gone. As for Kitty, she's a worldly little woman and can take good care of herself. Her letter should be sufficient."

"But it isn't. A woman's 'don't' often means 'do.' If Kitty really expects me to search for her and I do not she will never believe in me again."

"Perhaps your knowledge of women is more extensive than mine," said Hillard.

But this flattery did not appeal to Merrihew. "Bosh! There's something you haven't told me about that makes you so indifferent."

This was a shrewd guess, but Hillard had his reasons for not letting his friend see how close he had shot. "A lady? Grace of Mary, that is droll!" He could not cast this out of his thought. He floated between this phrase and Mrs. Sandford's frank defense of her girlhood friend.

"Time flies," he warned. "Which is it to be?"

"We'll go on to Venice. It would be folly for me to continue the hunt alone."

At 7 that evening they stepped out of the station in Venice—the blue twilight of Venice that curves down from the hollow heavens, softening a bit of ugliness here, accentuating a bit of loveliness there. Here Merrihew found one of his dreams come true, and his first vision of the Grand canal, with its gondolas and barges and queer little bobtailed skiffs, was never to leave him. Hillard hunted for his old gondolier, but could not find him. So he chose one Achille, No. 154. With their trunks, which they had picked up at Genoa, and small luggage in the hotel barge they had the gondola all to themselves.

Instead of following the Grand canal Achille took the short cut through the Ruga di San Giovanni and the Rio di San Polo.

Out into the Grand canal again. As they swept under the last bridge before coming out into the hotel district Hillard espied a beggar leaning over the parapet. The moonlight shone full in his face.

"Stop!" cried Hillard to Achille.

The beggar took to his heels, and when Hillard stepped out of the gondola the beggar had disappeared.

"Who was it?" asked Merrihew indifferently.

"Giovanni!"

CHAPTER XIV.

O'MALLY SUGGESTS.

In a bedroom in one of the cheap little pensiones which shoulder one another along the Riva degli Schiaboni sat three men. All three were smoking execrable tobacco. The castaways of the American Comic Opera troupe were on the anxious seat.

"O'Mally, what's your opinion of La Signorina?" said Worth.

"What about her?"

"What do you think of her? She's not one of us; she belongs to another class, and the stage is only an incident."

"Well, I don't know what to think. I've pumped Killigrew, but she seems to be in the dark with the rest of us. That ring and the careless way she offered it as security convince me that she doesn't belong. But what a voice!"

"She is without exception one of the most beautiful women I ever saw or care to see," rejoined Worth.

Smith and O'Mally exchanged a swift, comprehensive look.

Worth rose to go to Cook's office for possible letters, but abruptly returned to announce that the two ladies had returned from Monte Carlo. The actors proceeded to the parlor and greeted the prima donna and Kitty.

"We lost," explained the latter. [illegible] the erstwhile prima donna. "I might have known that when one is unlucky one may become still more unlucky. But I did so wish to win. I wanted to bring back enough gold to send you all to America."

"But what was to become of you?" asked Worth.

The question was not expected. "Oh, Italy is my home. I shall find a way somehow. Put me out of your thoughts entirely. But I am sorry to bring you this bitter disappointment, for it must be bitter."

"There is one thing I wish to understand thoroughly," put in Worth slowly.

MURDERED WIFE THEN KILLED HIMSELF

Special to the Review.

Montreal, Que., Aug. 18.—John O'Keefe shot his wife dead and then turned the weapon on himself early this morning, at 1350 Logan street, where the O'Keefes livd with another family. The cause for the tragedy is given as jealousy, and it is claimed a neighbor paid too much attention to O'Keefe's wife. There was no quarrelling, however, and the first intimation that anything was wrong was when a shot rang out and then a minute later another one. Both the woman and the man were dead when the neighbors arrived on the scene. O'Keefe was 47 and his wife 35 years old. Six children are left, ranging from fifteen down to two years of age.

KICK FROM HORSE WAS FATAL TO A BELMONT FARMER

Special to the Review.

Havelock, Aug. 18.—Allan Elmhirst, a well known farmer of Belmont township, was kicked by a horse this morning and died in a half hour, before medical assistance could be secured. He had been away fishing and was returning home with two friends when something went wrong with the whiffletree. In attempting to fix it one of the horses kicked him in the windpipe inflicting the injury that caused his death.

The deceased, who resides about three miles east of here on the Marmora road, was about 45 years of age, and leaves a wife and four children.

THEY STOLE BEER FROM THE CELLAR OF LOCAL HOTEL

Three Youths Admitted Lifting the Lager and Were Remanded for a Week — Ashburnham Man Pleaded Not Guilty to Vagrancy Charge.

The atmosphere of the police court seemed to attract an unusually large number of the curious this morning.

The first number on the program was that of three young men who were arraigned on a charge of breaking into the cellar of the Snowden House and stealing two cases of beer. They elected to be tried by the magistrate and pleaded guilty of stealing the beer only, and not of forcing an entrance to the cellar. A youth, who is now in Rochester, was the one who opened the window through which entrance to the cellar was gained.

The three youths, on their promise to report to the chief of police a week from Friday for sentence, were allowed to go.

Two of them were out on suspended sentence previous to this. It is three years since they last appeared.

ADVISED SOBRIETY.

James Tierney was there for being drunk yesterday. He has a family, and when he belonged to the T.A.S. he was all right. In discharging him the magistrate advised him to again unite himself with this body and keep sober.

VAGRANCY CHARGE.

Sleeping in a barn and without having any visible means of support, was the charge preferred against Frank Faux, of Ashburnham. He said that he had a home, but on the night of August 15th he went there and could not get in. He, therefore, slept in a barn.

Mr. R. E. Wood asked for an enlargement of his case for a week.

DROWNED AT WANAPITEI WAS THE SAD NEWS RECEIVED IN THE CITY

Mr. Isaac Eastwood, proprietor of the Palace Hotel, Hunter street, received the following telegram from Wanapitei, dated August 17, telling of the drowning of his brother—

Isaac Eastwood, Peterborough.—Bob Eastwood drowned here this morning. Body not recovered yet. Come up at once. (Signed) [illegible]

The person to whom the above telegram was Mr. Robert Eastwood, foreman of a large lumber company near Wanapitei. He was known in Peterborough, having paid a visit here about three years ago.

Immediately on receipt of the telegram Mr. Eastwood communicated with his other brother, Thomas, of Buckhorn, and the two left on the 8.10 G.T.R. this morning for the scene of the fatality.

About twelve o'clock to-day Mrs. Eastwood received another telegram stating that the body of the unfortunate man had been recovered.

Further than this no more particulars of the accident are known here. The wife of the drowned man died about five years ago [illegible] buried at Marmora, where Mr. Eastwood's home was, and it is, therefore, probable that his body will be taken to Marmora for interment.

Mr. and Mrs. Eastwood and relatives will have the sympathy of a large number of friends incident upon their loss.

High Salaries

Salaries in all lines are advancing but in none so rapidly as stenography. Young ladies graduating from the Peterborough Business College during the past year, started at from ten ($10) to fifteen dollars ($15) per week and several young lady graduates of a few years ago are receiving twelve hundred dollars ($1200) per annum, any young lady can master stenography in six months and Mr. Spotton personally guarantees all graduates positions within ten days of graduation. For young men, stenography is the key to success. A male graduate of two years ago is now receiving Two Thousand Five Hundred Dollars ($2500) per annum. Parents should teach their boys that which they will practice when they become men. The business world is asking for young people, who have a business education. Mr. Spotton's chain of colleges last year trained over sixteen hundred students at College and by home study. Any young person needing advice as to the advantage of a commercial training should write him.

FIREWORKS DISPLAY AT OTTAWA FAIR

The grand fireworks programme comprises 55 specially designed pyrotechnical displays. The brilliant performance starts off with a salvo of Hand's High Explosive Bombs, detonated in mid-air. They can be heard for miles around. Next, a hot air balloon with fireworks attachment will shoot up, showing lights of varied colors. Another will ascend with a revolving firewheel appendage. This will be followed by a balloon with combination attachment. The display will begin with Prismatic Lights and change to Shooting Stars, ending with a copious stream of Electric Fire.

A Mammoth Illuminated Balloon carrying a very effective firework attachment, known as the bag fire and Saxon display, is the fifth item. Then follows another, releasing a chain of stars, 100 feet in length. The stars change color many times and end with a dowfall of Silver Fire Dust.

No. 7, Prismatic Illumination, can be used for the march past, the tattoo, or to light up the surroundings and produce a fairyland effect. There is a series of changes as follows:—From white to rose; from rose to emerald; from emerald to amber; from amber to blue. Rivalling in beauty this sight is the next display, consisting of Luminette Rockets. There is one of rubies and emeralds, one of amber and turquoises, and one of purple and gold.

The 9th item is a display of Silverbell Rockets, discharging pink crystal Electric Petals. Golden Stream Rockets spring out next, leaving 300 feet of a delightful tail of gold behind them. "Swarm of Golden Butterflies" is the name of the 11th exhibit. A giant shell arises and breaks at a great height into myriads of flittering stars. Following this the heavens will be filled by the simultaneous flight of five standard shells.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—I would like to draw the attention of the Board of Works to Water street, west side, between London street and Dublin street. Whenever it rains there is a pool of water forms on the side of this street between these blocks. Get busy, gentlemen. Voting time will soon be here.

NOTE PAPER.

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—It has got to be a habit amongst outsiders to say that Canadians have never got past the loaves and fishes age, the age when a child would sacrifice everything for a piece of pie or a sweety. The larger, manlier view is supposed not yet to have broken to any great extent on the green Canadian wilderness. But this is not altogether true. Instances arise which put to ignominous shame the flash and crookedness of the so-called rich. Not long ago your correspondent had to visit a remote cabin, deep in the far off bush. The father was ill. He had been drifting into a suspiciously low state of health for years. He sold his possessions to pay for the rescue of his child from a deadly disease. His wife and children were literally all he had. His cabin barely deserved the name. His lot was hard, cruelly hard. But hard as was his fate, his manhood was still harder, and when the political sneak, the hireling of perjurers and thieves, came to his cabin and offered him MONEY to lie and to sell his vote, he waved the cur aside with scorn. It is in the wilds that the earliest and best of manhood is yet to be found. The old virtues still mean much to them. They have souls that are worth saving. All honor to the bush.

Yours,
OLD-TIMER.

REPORT FOUND TO BE EXAGGERATED

James Woodbeck of Oak Lake Alleged to be Assaulted by James Clopper and Not Murdered as Was Rumored —Woodbeck Was Beaten With Whiffletree and and Assailant Has Disappeared

Last night the Review was informed that a murder had been committed near Havelock. The Review's Havelock correspondent was immediately instructed to investigate the matter, and the following dispatch shows the report to have been exaggerated.

Special to the Review.

Havelock, Aug. 16.—There is doubtless nothing in the report of James Woodbeck, of Oak Lake, being assaulted and killed by a man by the name of Clapper. Word was received here this afternoon that Woodbeck was said to be assaulted by Clapper last week and had since been found dead.

Chief Bennet and Constable Williams drove out to the north country to-night and found it true that a man had attacked Woodbeck with a whiffletree, but had not, apparently, inflicted any severe injuries.

Anyway, Woodbeck disappeared and has not been seen since. It is rumored that Woodbeck is now residing with a farmer in Donegal township, near Trent Bridge.

THE MOON WAS WANING BUT THE FUN WASN'T

The moon shone out brilliantly last evening. Why? Because it was the Bugler's moonlight excursion and it was only fitting that the moon should beam on this occasion and so harmonize with the rest of the evening's proceedings. It was indeed an animated scene. The scarlet coats of the buglers and drummers added that touch of color which was needed to brighten the general appearance of the boat and the glare of the numerous incandescents, with the multi-colored dresses of the ladies made an ever-changing scene.

No sooner had the steamer pulled away from the dock, laden with her joyous pleasure-seekers, than the moon as if to atone for her seemingly previous sullen mood, burst out from behind a rift of clouds and continued to shed her glorious rays for the remainder of the evening.

The bugle band marched down to the steamer, sounding various calls and shortly afterwards the boat left the wharf, filled to her limit. It is estimated that two-hundred and eighty-nine were on board.

Soon the strains of Devey's orchestra began to quicken the blood of the dancing set on board and before long, in a cleared space on the lower deck, the familiar round and square dances were being enjoyed by the young men and maidens.

Dancing was continued all the way up and down, Mr. Devey and his orchestra rendering very suitable music.

Mr. Cassel was a capable master of ceremonics.

A refreshment booth in the bow took in large receipts, owing to the liberal patronage. Credit must also be given to the red-coated vendors of peanuts, bananas and oranges, who cried the wares while going in and out amongst the passengers. The waiters were in no way miserly, giving good measure in all their sales.

After going down about seven miles the return trip was commenced. Peterborough wharf was reached shortly after eleven, and every person was unanimous in claiming it to have been probably the most successful affair of its nature this summer. Great credit is due to the managing committee for their energetic and successful efforts towards making the evening such a success, and also to Mr. Walter Fitzgerald, the active and energetic secretary treasurer of the Bugle band.

The trip was made on the steamer "Stony Lake."

OFF TO THE CONVENTION CHIEF HOWARD'S TRIP

At the close of this convention Chief Howard will go to New York city, and then to Boston and on to Philadelphia. He will return via Oswego and Kingston.

Deputy Chief George Grange will have charge while Chief Howard is away.

The C.G.E. Mutual Benefit Society met last evening in the Y.M.C.A. Hall. The president, Mr. R. Anson, was in the chair and there was a good attendance.

A vote of thanks to the officers for the able manner in which they conducted the business was moved by W. Hill and seconded by Charles Akey.

TAKE IT BACK.

Who was saying "Norwood is dead?" Whoever did will have to take back all they said. Norwood is going to be all or more than it has ever been. Since the disastrous fire of May 4th people who are most interested in the business welfare of the village have been quietly figuring out what is best to do, till on Monday morning of this week, when work was commenced in earnest to rebuild and make Norwood what from its position is one of the best farming localities in Ontario, what it should be, and what it must be on account of the demands made upon it by the trading public. Quite a large number of up-to-date stores will always be required here to handle the large trade centreing here. Farmers from many miles on all sides of Norwood prefer to do their dealing here, as we have always been fortunate in having most accommodating merchants to attend to their numerous wants.

The business men of Norwood report business to have been and as being in a most satisfactory condition. Mr. J. L. Squire has put men on the clearing up of his old stand on Peterborough street and is going to have erected on the premises a store fully equipped to handle his increasing trade. The store will occupy about 30 feet frontage with nearly 100 feet depth, and will be so laid out and arranged to make it one of the most modern and up-to-date grocery and provision stores in the county.

Mr. Robert Stewart, druggist, has commenced building operations in earnest on his lot on the Elliott lot and will have two very fine stores with commodious dwellings overhead. One of the stores the doctor intends occupying himself, while the other one will be to rent.

Mr. Jesse Thomson, who has been carrying on a successful grocery business for the past few years, has purchased a building lot on the Roxburg estate, adjoining the Union Bank, and has the excavation almost completed, over which he will erect a store fully equipped to handle his growing trade.

MEETING OF THE NORTH MONAGHAN TWP. COUNCIL

The Township Council met in the town hall at 7 p.m. on Monday, August 15th. All the members were present. The reeve in the chair.

The minutes of the last meetings were read and confirmed.

Accounts were handed in as follows;

Kingan Hardware Co., pick handle, 25c; Adamson & Dobbin, signs, $2; John Tully, account as referred, $5.40; F. Moncrief, pay sheet, Park street bridge, $26.20; S. G. Bennett, gravel cut 90 yards, $9; H. Shurter, preparing specifications, $5.

Moved by Messrs. Foster and May that the accounts of Kingan & Co. Adamson & Dobbin, John Tully, F. Moncrief and S. Bennett be passed and paid, and that the account of H. Shurter be referred, with all others in connection with sidewalk construction to Mr. Peck, to be paid as soon as the work is completed. This was carried.

A petition from W. H. Anderson and fifteen other property owners on McGill street, was presented, asking the council to gravel the said street

It was moved by Messrs. May and Morrow, that the request of the petitioners regarding the gravelling of McGill street, be granted, and that the commissioner of road division No. 6 is hereby directed to gravel such portion of this said street, as may be designated by Mr. Howden. This was carried.

Mr. Andrew Hogg attended the meeting and appealed to the council to have a railing placed upon the sides of the grade at Lockie's Creek.

It was moved by Messrs. Foster and Robson, that a committee consisting of the reeve and Messrs. May and Morrow are hereby appointed to inspect the place complained of by Mr. Hogg, and if they think necessary to have it fixed up. This was carried.

The committee appointed at the last meeting, re the closing of the side road on Con. 11, reported that after interviewing the property owners on the said road, and finding that there was some opposition to having the road closed, they therefore recommended that no action be taken in the matter at the present time. The report was received and approved.

Requisition for county rates and trustees school monies were received as follows;—

County rate	$1731 49
County House of Refuge	346 29

The total assessment of the township being the sum of $693,000, it would, therefore, be necessary to levy a rate of three mills on the dollar to raise a county levy of $2080, and a rate of 1 3-10 mills on the dollar to raise a township levy of $889.

These estimates were then approved and the clerk was directed to prepare by-laws to authorize the levying of the foregoing rates, and also by-laws to authorize the levying of rates to raise the school monies as demanded by the several Boards of Trustees and the general public school levy, as enacted by the Public Schools Act.

Council then adjourned to meet in the county committee rooms at Peterborough on September 10th next, at 2 o'clock p.m.

LAYS DUST—RUINS TIRES

Goderich, Aug. 15—Since the biling of the streets here, much has been said by citizens for and against the idea which has been in practice only a few weeks. The oil certainly fulfils its mission of layingthe dust, but the damage it does in other respects is likely to offset the benefit it gives.

It appears to be a deadly foe to rubber tires. It is not necessary to ride on the oil all the time to ruin tires; across the road a few times is enough. The oil seems to eat the rubber like lye. Dozens of bycicles have been ruined and it is certain that much damage has been done to automobiles tires.

Rubber-tired carriages are not driven on the oiled streets when it can be helped.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Aug. 17.—(Special.)—Altho prices in the leading foreign markets for Canadian ranch cattle have been steadily tending downward during the past month, the increased movement of the latter, which set in in the early part of July, continues, and, as the quality of the stock going forward is not up to former years, it is having a depressing influence on the markets, and the decline in prices in the Liverpool market for ranchers since the first of July has been 1½c to 2c per lb. All the ocean freight space for the balance of this month is well booked up, and the demand has now set in for the offerings of September, and the bulk of the Liverpool freight has been closed out at 27s 6d per head, and for what is left agents are asking 30s. There has been no demand for space to other ports as yet for September shipment, but agents are asking 25s to 30s for London, 27s 6d for Manchester and 30s for Glasgow for the first half.

At the Canadian Pacific live stock market this morning offerings were 880 cattle, 550 sheep and lambs, 700 hogs and 308 calves. There was no actual change in the condition of the market for cattle since Monday, prices being well maintained at the advance, on account of the fact that the supplies are not in excess of requirements, and the quality of the stock was rather better. In addition to this, the weather was more favorable for butchers, and the demand in consequence was larger, which resulted in more active trade being done. Choice steers sold at 6¼c, good at 5¾c to 6c, fairly good at 5¼c to 5½c, fair at 4¾c to 5c, and common at 4¼c to 4½c per pound. There were a number of cows on the market, which met with a better trade at prices ranging from 3½c to 5c, and common bulls brought 3c to 3¼c per pound.

There was a fair supply of small meats on the market, for which the demand was good, and an active trade was done, but prices were lower than on Monday. Sheep sold at 3½c to 4c, and lambs at 3¾c to 5½c per pound. The demand for calves was good at prices ranging from $3 to $11 each. The tone of the market for hogs was firm under a good demand, and sales of selected lots were made at $9.25 to $9.50 per cwt., weighed off cars.

At the Montreal Stock Yards West End [illegible] lambs, 600 hogs and [illegible] calves. A fair trade was done in all lines, and the prices realized were much the same as those quoted above.

SOME FISH, EH, WHAT?

TORONTO TELEGRAM

The maskinonge that Principal Embree of Jarvis street Collegiate admits he caught

Weighed .... 33 lbs.
Measured .... 50 inches.
Was landed in .... 5 mins.

And anybody who doesn't believe it can go to Jim Byrns at the offices of the Board of Education in the City Hall and see it for himself. He can't see the fish, but he can see the admission in Dr. Embree's hand and over his own signature.

Whether or not Principal Embree blushed when writing the letter had not been discovered up to the hour of going to press. The surrounding circumstances indicate that he did not. Nor does the caligraphy suggest that the hand of Dr. Embree shook as the words were penned.

The letter comes from Honey Harbort, which as everybody knows, is up in the Georgian Bay, via Penetang and intermediate points. It is dated the 9th, but whether or not the delay was due to the possible hesitation of Dr. Embree in posting the sive, cannot be determined.

Give the Family Income a Chance

Perhaps the family income is big enough after all.

Perhaps the reason it does not seem to go as far as it should is because you do not spend it thriftily enough.

Perhaps when you buy, you do not go to the right stores at the right time.

If you read the store advertisements regularly you will soon see ways of stretching your dollars.

You will soon learn where to go for this and where to buy that.

You will soon be giving your "expense money" a chance to buy you the things you now need and other things that a little surplus money might make you think you need—

But which you cannot now afford.

A TALE OF TWO CITIES.

Kinks in the Histories of New York and Chicago.

The manner in which the metropolis of the western hemisphere got its name is a matter that has been dealt with by many able chroniclers. The most trustworthy and at the same time the most plausible story is as follows:

After the Dutch had ceased to be dominant in the city a prominent member of one of the English families that had gained influence in the rapidly growing young community one day traded oxen with a neighbor and on his way home stopped in front of a tavern somewhere on what is now lower Broadway. As he did so several of the men who were in the habit of frequenting the place assembled in the front yard, and one of them cried out:

"Hello! Those ain't the oxen you used to have."

"No," replied the owner of the cattle. "I've got a new yoke."

"New yoke" at once became a common phrase and was soon adopted as the name of the city. It was an easy step from that to "New Yawk," the present name of the place.

The naming of Chicago came about in a curious way. Shortly after the building of the first few huts near the banks of the river one of John Kinzie's boys caught two crows, a male and a female, which he tamed and taught to speak the English language. The Kinzies had at that time a young Indian maiden, who did plain sewing and other household duties, and she became very fond of the pet crows. One day the female crow managed somehow to get out of the cage in which the birds were kept and at once flew away. The Indian girl chanced to see the crow make its escape, and, greatly excited, she rushed into the dining room, where the various members of the family were waiting for the finger bowls. Waving her arms up and down as if they had been wings, the young squaw cried:

"She caw go!"

Shecawgo was at once adopted as the name of the town and remains so to this day, the spelling only having been changed.—Chicago Record-Herald.

General French as a Boy.

General Sir John French has left Canada after an almost end-to-end inspection of her soldiers. But one bet he overlooked, and it was a good bet too. In the route of his march the headquarters staff at Ottawa forgot to mark a stop-over at any of the camps in the Province of Quebec. Montreal officers are somewhat mystified at this apparent neglect and, during the day or two that he remained in the city, before sailing for home, several diplomatic attempts were made to find out from the general himself what reasons were given for not allotting [illegible] look over the cavalry at Farnham and the infantry at Three Rivers and Levis.

"That's a conundrum," replied the general laughingly, when the question was put to him point blank. "And, speaking of conundrums," continued he, "I never could get that word straight, much less frame up an answer to one. Cucumbers, cumberers and conundrums all looked alike to me when I was a boy.

"As you probably know I am the only boy in a family of seven, the others, naturally, being girls. At rather an early age I took it upon myself as 'the only man of the family' to conduct family prayers when my father was away. My mother was very pleased at first, but hastily withdrew her consent when she heard my first effort. I said, 'Oh, Lord, cut us not off as cucumbers of the ground'."

Johnny meant cumberers.

YOUTH AND BEAUTY

Women and Men are Anxious to Keep Young

Nothing so detracts from the attractiveness of woman as dull faded, lusterless hair.

There is no excuse for this condition nowadays, because notice is hereby given to the readers of the Review, that Parisian Sage, the quick acting hair restorer, is now on sale in Peterborough, at the drug store of Wm. Madill, and sold with a guarantee at 50 cents a large bottle.

Since its introduction into Canada, Parisian Sage has had an immense sale, and here are the reasons:

It is safe and harmless.

It removes dandruff in two weeks, by killing the dandruff germ.

It stops falling hair.

It promptly stops itching of the scalp.

It makes the hair soft, glossy, and luxuriant.

It gives life and beauty to the hair.

It is not sticky or greasy.

It is the daintiest perfumed hair tonic made.

It is the best, the most pleasant and invigorating hair dressing made.

Fight shy of the druggist who offers you a substitute, he is unworthy of your confidence.

Made only in Canada by Giroux Mfg. Co., Fort Erie, Ont. The girl with the Auburn hair is on every bottle.

THE MATURING WEST

EAST MEETS WEST WITH NEW AND OLD TOWNS IN BOTH.

The Visitor to the West Who Has Looked Upon the Prairie Cities as Prosaic Mushroom Growths Is Surprised at Mass of Fascinating History Lying Behind Some of Them—More Experienced Than East.

The literary discovery of the Canadian West has been the achievement of a very recent period, writes Roden Kingsmill in The Canadian Courier. The Wild West we had long ago from Ballantyne, Butler and a dozen of their followers, but only of late has the Westerner begun to figure largely in fiction or descriptive article as anything but a curiosity. At present, native and alien writers are alike solicited to write of the West as it is, just as if the West as it was yesterday or day before yesterday had been quite a different place. An Englishman, in a recent English review, gives us, with a flowered opulence of phrase, an idea of his surprise at western conditions: "Tanned by the prairie winds, warmed by the glowing sunshine of the level lands, standing where meet the trade currents of East and West, with command over both, the Canadian Westerner has in his grasp a glorious destiny, and he seems capable of living up to it."

Nobody surely desires to speak slightingly of the amelioration of the Westerner's lot which has followed the introduction of such discoveries and inventions as dry farming, irrigation, the co-operative local telephone and its companion, the Government lines, and the automobile without allusion to which no discourse on the West of to-day can be called complete. But other people cannot reasonably be asked to admire the West's performance unless they themselves have been unequal to similar feats. The participants in a long-distance run do not turn around at its end to marvel at one another's speed or endurance—unless, perhaps, one of them is a boy or a weakling from whom nothing much was to be expected. The West, not so long ago, was as sensitive to being snubbed or patronized by the East as was New England when Wendell Holmes waxed wrathy because foreigners displayed their "certain condescension." But though the West is now more urbane—perhaps does a little patronizing itself—toward its cities, it is a reasonable question how much longer it need be regarded as a youngster.

Every so often some writer on Canadian affairs speaks of the "experiment" of a federal country within the Empire. And yet Canada as a nation is in point of fact one of the oldest, in place of being one of the youngest in the sense that our form of government has continued in operation for more years with less alteration than many of the others. Our instrument of government is older than that of Germany, France, Japan, Russia, Norway, Turkey, Spain. The same argument may with justice be applied to the claims of the West. Montreal was founded by the French, yet almost no sign of French occupation remains in the streets or edifices of the city. Even Quebec is much more modern than ancient. On the other hand, not even Winnipeg can show so large an area of brand new buildings, so many acres that were market gardens ten years ago, as are to be found in Montreal or Toronto. Residents of Winnipeg, who in the eighties were offered acre lots on Portage avenue for $100, are not more numerous than Montrealers whose fathers could have bought equal acres on St. Catherine street for a like amount or Torontonians who misguidedly let go generous slices of central property. "How much this is like British Columbia!" said [illegible] dukedoms of Nova Scotia apple orchards. "How much this is like Ontario!" said Easterners who motored with Mr. R. L. Borden through the Riding Mountains when he toured the West four years ago.

In any event, it is only figuratively that we speak of a community as growing old. The only Anglican prelate in Canada who was born in his diocese is the Archbishop of Rupert's Land—and he is the oldest bishop, also. Where shall you find a sleepier—or pleasanter—town than Selkirk on the Red River of the North? It was a thriving village three generations ago when lusty young Ontario and Nova Scotia cities of to-day had not been chopped out of the forest or set atop their coal mines to transmute carbon into gold.

And so it is only figuratively that we may speak of communities as growing old. Greybeards, though near the passing of the Great Divide, move west into the very newest boom towns; babies continue to be born in cities that saw Madame de la Peltrie or entertained Frontenac. If that town is oldest which can trace back a coherent and connected history for the longest period, then we must not forget Selkirk and Winnipeg and Esquimalt. And add Fort Churchill. All can put in very plausible claims for admission to the fellowship of the good old towns. The Canadian press has had occasion to refer to the highly modern energy of Moncton, whose Board of Trade are booming the New Brunswick railway centre with a vigor that prairie-dwellers could not better. Any western community that has gone on doing the same thing—wheat dealing, for instance—in an increasing scale for twenty years or so is older, in a sense, than Amherst, which has so broken with traditions of a leisurely past that it is in the front rank of woollen-producing communities; or Sydney, with its burrowing coal mines and roaring furnaces; or bustling St. John; or Quebec, which, with Levis, is the third greatest boot and shoe manufacturing centre in the Empire. Away from the railway lines in some parts of the West, or in Ontario, are to be found villages which are stagnant in appearance as Valleyfield or Welland or Sherbrooke are brisk and up-to-date.

If there is a critical period in the life of any town, it is when the last of its old settlers dies. The man who came into the wilderness with his Red River cart and saw the first bushel of wheat ground into flour—in a mortar, maybe—is a character that the East knows not of. The old settler still inhabits the West. The newcomer who was too young to vote—if there had been any place to vote—in the mid-seventies is probably a grandfather to-day. The grandchild of the first white boy born in Manitoba is alive in Winnipeg to-day. The Westerner knows how the death of the oldest inhabitant can be a real climacteric. After he is gone there remains no one who can remember a time when the town was not. And, after all, what town can say more than that?

"I have no mother or father," pleaded a man of fifty at Tottenham, Eng., court.

VILLIERS WAS ANGRY.

Reminiscence of War Correspondent's Lecture Tour In Canada.

Frederick Villiers, the famous war correspondent, who has declared his intention of settling in the Canadian West, was on a lecturing tour through Canada some half-dozen years ago. Among the places in which Villiers was billed to speak was a Western Ontario city in which lectures are notoriously ill-attended. So much is this the case that the manager of the theatre where the Villiers' talk was to be given did not think it worth while to advertise his coming at all extensively.

Villiers came. The local newspapers recognized the bigness of the man, and gave him a couple of columns of space. These papers, however, did not appear until the evening of his lecture—too late to bring him an audience. When the distinguished visitor came on the platform, there were about one dozen and a half people in the badly-heated house. Most of them had come in on passes. The lecturer looked over his audience with some surprise, but began his talk without comment, and carried it through to the end without abbreviation, but also, it must be said, without marked enthusiasm.

The latter quality he reserved for a little extra speech which was not on the program. In it he delineated in concise, but cutting, terms the character of that particular theatre manager, who had neglected to advertise his coming. The audience, which had applauded feebly throughout the regular lecture, was moved to still more marked appreciation. The thirty-six hands beat as one, as Mr. Villiers continued to outline his opinion of the manager, who was squirming uncomfortably in the doorway. And as the audience dispersed, its members looked in vain for the usual form at the exit. The manager had fled. Mr. Villiers' "roast" is still remembered in that Ontario town as one of the most scathing ever delivered within its borders.

The Story of the Icelanders.

Lately, there has been history on the Red River. A few days ago, a little party of Icelanders filed out of their church and marched to the big steamer Winnitoba for a short excursion. They were a reflective crowd, thinking of the old days. Thirty-five years ago the first men of Iceland reached Winnipeg. From there they pushed out in barges northward to the west shore of Lake Winnipeg. The trip was not very smooth. Sometimes the frail craft grounded; notably when the St. Andrews Rapids was reached. Four days they drifted. At last, the mouth of the river greeted them; then there was a pause till the Colville of the Hudson Bay Co. fleet chugged into sight and hauled the lonely foreigners on board. On Sunday, Oct. 20, 1875, at a jut of land on the west coast known as Willow Point they disembarked from the Colville. Possibly this Sabbath Day was the most depressive that they ever spent in their lives. From the crowded thoroughfares of the east to the trails of the wilderness was rather an abrupt transition. Indians stalked out of the [illegible] with mild wonder. The night were hideous with the barking of prairie wolves.

That was thirty-five years ago. Willow Point is now Gimili of the Icelanders, one of the prosperous immigrant settlements of the Dominion. To-day there are at least ten thousand Icelanders in Canada — great many assimilated. Icelanders sit in the legislatures, publish newspapers; some of the young chaps have won Rhode Scholarships and played football. Such is the making of Canada.

Preliminary.

"Are you the lawyer who has secured divorces for so many people?"

"I have been quite successful, madam."

"How much does a divorce cost?"

"Depends on circumstances. On what grounds do you wish divorce?"

"Oh, mercy, I don't know! I'm not married yet, only engaged, but I think it is a woman's duty to familiarize herself with every phase of domestic life. Good morning."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Had Watched the Cows.

Johnny had spent a week at his uncle's farm. It was his first experience of country life, and on his return, very brown and plump, he refused to have anything more to do with milk.

When a glass was pressed upon him he sneered and said:

"None of that for me, thanks. I know all about that stuff now. It's nothing but chewed grass."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Before Marriage.

"Do you know I felt sad at reading something today, dear," said the sweet young thing.

"And what was that, sweetheart?" said the man to whom she was engaged.

"Why, I read that only about one out of every thousand married couples lives to celebrate its golden wedding."—Yonkers Statesman.

An Embarrassing Word.

"Then," said the reporter, "I'll say several pretty songs were rendered by Miss Packer."

"Oh, gracious, no," replied the hostess, "you mustn't say 'rendered!' You see, her father made all his money in lard."—Catholic Standard and Times.

AS THEY WOULD HAVE WRITTEN "CASEY."

[After Rudyard Kipling.]

This is the doleful story,
  Told when the twilight fails
And the newsboys yell together,
  Boosting the "uxtry" sales:

King Casey played for the Mudvilles.
  Large were his brawny fists.
He was a worldwide wonder
  At killing the pitcher's twists.

But hark to the tale of his downfall—
  Two strikes were called mid din;
Then, ere the third came hurtling,
  Square set was Casey's chin.

Swiftly the pill came floating
  Over the rubber pan,
And wild was the swipe of Casey,
  Missing by half a span.

Thus were the Mudvilles beaten,
  Downed in the pennant race.
Thus was proud Casey humbled;
  Deep was the king's disgrace.

This is the horrible story
  Told as the twilight fails,
When the newsboys yell together,
  Boosting the "uxtry" sales.

—Arthur Chapman in Denver Republican.

A Modern Solomon.

An old gentleman some time ago had occasion to engage a gardener. One morning he had two applicants for the position. One was a very decent looking man, while the other was much less prepossessing in his appearance and manner.

After a moment's hesitation the old gentleman chose the latter applicant.

A friend who was present evinced a good deal of surprise at the selection and asked, "Has that man worked for you before?"

"No," replied the old gentleman. "As a matter of fact, I never saw either of them until today."

"Then why did you choose the shorter man? The other had a much better face!"

"Face!" exclaimed the old man in disgust. "Let me tell you something. When you choose a gardener, choose him by his breeches. If they are patched on the knees you want him; if they are patched on the seat you don't want him."—Baltimore American.

Unkind.

"Of course," said the lady with the steel rimmed spectacles, "I expected to be called strong minded after making a speech three hours long in favor of our sex, but to have it printed 'strong winded' was too, too much."—Boston Courier.
